14. ABSTRACT

The GraphEx Symposium brought together leading experts from universities, industry, and government to discuss the latest research and future directions in network science and analysis. The event was limited to a small group of invited attendees. The symposium took place at the MIT Endicott House.

The Symposium Highlights:
The two-day technical program topics of interest included: models of real-world network phenomena; methods and analysis for graph-based datasets; inference, visualization, and computation techniques for large-scale networks; construction of networks from real-world data; and challenge problems for the next decade.
