c. Training: In addition to continuing its normal 24 hour operational capability, this battalion conducted a total of 156 hours of scheduled training for all personnel. Emphasis was placed on automatic weapons training, replacement training, and training for gunners and assistant gunners. A battalion firing battery inspection team continued its operations.

d. Observation: During this reporting period this battalion provided eight forward observer teams to ground forces in Northern I Corps. These teams, consisting of a forward observer, a recon sergeant, and a radio telephone operator, included assignments to Special Forces elements, 2nd ARVN Regiment, 101st Airborne Division (AMEL), and three permanent assignments to 3/5th Cavalry Squadron.

e. Logistics:

(1) During the reporting period this battalion was engaged in extensive area improvement and a building program at Camp Carroll. Personnel bunkers and a large unit mess hall were completed. Battalion headquarters moved into a new bunker.

(1) Marking Perimeters at Fire Bases

SUBJECT: Operational Report-Lessons Learned, 8th Battalion (175MM/8 INCH)(SP), 4th Artillery, Period Ending 30 April 1970, RCS CSFOR-65 (R2)(U).

(a) OBSERVATION: During enemy ground attacks at night on fire support bases it is many times very difficult for air support elements to accurately determine the edge of the friendly perimeter from the air.

(b) EVALUATION: Although ARA and gunships are available for defense of fire support bases, their inability to accurately fix the friendly perimeter may decrease their effectiveness considerably. This inability may often result in accidental friendly casualties or may cause the gunships to refuse to fire close-in support.

(c) RECOMMENDATION: Artillery ammunition canisters, preferably 8" or 175MM, may be filled with diesel fuel and buried up to their rims along the edge of the defensive perimeter about 20 meters outside the interior wire and from 10 to 20 meters apart. These can then be ignited by a command fired trip flare mounted over the canister of diesel to provide an excellent perimeter marking device. These "pots" burn in excess of eight hours once ignited and may be immediately ignited at the first indication of a ground attack or probe. Once ignited, these pots will burn throughout the night outlining the fire base for supporting air as well as providing a substantial amount of ground illumination.

(2) Self-Illumination Capability at Fire Support Bases

(a) OBSERVATION: For units without an organic illumination capability in locations where there is a very limited amount of artillery with an illumination capability, difficulty sometimes arises in response time for requested illumination.

(b) EVALUATION: Units in fairly permanent fire bases not defended by an infantry unit or some force with the specific designated task of base defense many times have no self-illumination capability. When there are many small units in the field in night defensive positions and when the artillery illumination capability in that area of operations is very limited, the need for self-illumination may very easily arise. Should the artillery illumination capability be over-extended at any time by illumination requests for the NDP's, the unit without a self-illumination capability may find itself not able to illuminate its perimeter in case of attack.

(c) RECOMMENDATION: An 81MM mortar may be procured and a crew easily trained to fire illumination only. Once a crew is trained, the individuals can be placed on stand-by during the night to provide immediate illumination should artillery illumination not be available. The addition of four mortar crews per heavy artillery battalion is also recommended as a modification of the TOE for heavy artillery units engaged in Vietnam.

1. This headquarters has reviewed the Operational Report-Lessons Learned for the quarterly period ending 30 April 1970 from Headquarters, 8th Battalion (175MM/8 INCH) (SP), 4th Artillery and concurs with comments of indorsing headquarters.

2. Reference item concerning "Marking Perimeters at Fire Bases", page 4, paragraph 2c(1): concur. It is essential that the perimeters of FSBs under attack be accurately identified to ARA and gunship support. Fuel containers used as mentioned are a good field expedient; however, they require daily checks to insure they are full of fuel, trip flare mountings must be checked, and they must be protected from water contamination during the monsoon season. The distress light marker (FSN 6230-067-5209) is authorized by current TOE (2 per Arty Btry and 13 per Inf Co) and can also be used for perimeter marking.
