TEST SYNOPSIS AND DATA

GENERAL

The desert test phase consisted of 29 tests: twenty one test flights; four aborted test flights; and four ground tests.

A summary of all the tests is presented in table I.

Eight test runs were selected as yielding the best data. These were runs 2, 7-11, 17, and 25. Data from these selected tests are presented in this appendix. Portions of the data have been deleted when it was evident that errors existed because of instrumentation malfunction.

AIRCRAFT INSTRUMENTATION

The aircraft instrumentation consisted of a low speed digital tape recording system and a photopanel mounted on a test table. All of these were connected to the aircraft test instrumentation wiring in the aircraft. The Air Force furnished the instrumentation systems and the contractor (Sikorsky Aircraft Corp) instrumented the aircraft. The photopanel was capable of recording much faster than the digital tape recording system and therefore was particularly useful for recording data during APP and engine starts. Excluding the reference and time parameters, there were approximately 195 parameters recorded on the digital tape recording system and approximately 40 parameters recorded on the photopanel system. The aircraft test instrumentation was normally operated for each test mission from preflight to after engine shutdown.

The digital tape system was capable of recording a complete sweep of all parameters in approximately 20 seconds. The parameter sweep and the interval between sweeps could be varied.

The photopanel camera was capable of operating at a maximum speed of four frames per second to record rapid transients. The camera control could be slaved to the digital system so that a frame of photopanel data would be recorded for each digital sweep.

Data reduction of the information recorded on the digital tape was accomplished by utilizing computer processing resulting in data printed in tabular format. The computer processing system also provided the capability of selected data printout in graphical format.

GROUND STATION INSTRUMENTATION

The following ground station instrumentation was used:

Desert test ramp and air temperature - Ramp temperature and air temperature near the aircraft was recorded continuously during the aircraft soak and test period. Air temperature was measured from one inch to 15 feet above the ramp.

Desert test solar radiation - Solar radiation was recorded during the aircraft soak and test period.

Data playback unit (quick look data printer) - This data playback unit was used for all test phases. It was capable of providing printed tabular "raw" data from the aircraft digital instrumentation recorder tape. The raw data had to be manually converted to real data. It was used to obtain information for trouble shooting the aircraft digital instrumentation system or to monitor suspected problem areas in the aircraft systems.

PARAMETER LISTING

The aircraft test parameters are listed as follows:

Table III - Digital

HOW TO USE THE TABULATED DIGITAL DATA

Following are the reduced, edited, and tabulated digital data from the desert tests. Each of the tests was selected for the most representative climatic data or to document specific subsystem tests. Data are presented for each temperature level and test condition. In the tabulated data that follow, the individual digital test parameters (temperature, pressure, rpm, etc.) are designated by three numbers (such as 1-01) and the abbreviated name of the parameter (see table III for unabbreviated names). The first number from 1 to 8 of the three-number designation is the switch box number. Generally, boxes one and two contain pressure, flow, rpm, and engine power parameters, while boxes three through eight contain temperature parameters. The second two numbers in the designation (01 to 29) give the step position within the box.

Elapsed time is given in minutes and seconds (hours for soak data). The first column of numbers on each page is entitled SWEEP COUNT. This column lists the number of times that the test parameters have been sampled at any particular time. The numbers in the column are referred to as counter numbers (C/N). The counter numbers are cumulative and are used to identify events and to correlate data with events. The correlation of the data trends throughout each test is made by referring to the applicable event sheet for the tabulated data for each flight, noting the counter number at which an event took place, and then referring to the data at that counter number. The elapsed time between counter numbers is normally about 20 seconds, but could be varied by the operator.

Unless otherwise noted, an asterisk indicates that a data point has been removed because of defective instrumentation or other causes resulting in erroneous data.

Test Synopsis:

This run was chosen to present a reference run (particularly engine power checks) before the start of the desert testing. Reference to the event sheet for this run shows engine No. 2 power checks accomplished from C/N 425 to C/N 475, and engine No. 1 power checks accomplished from C/N 482 to C/N 508. The air temperature is shown as parameter 1-04 in the data sheets and the engine values are shown as parameters 1-05 through 1-15. Parameter 1-13, engine No. 2 power turbine speed, is not presented because of defective instrumentation, but it is identical with the rotor rpm, parameter 1-15. The final data presented also contain engine power checks (reference run 25).

Pertinent information.

APP newly installed before this run.

Both engines had -13 fuel control and EAPS.

Engine No. 2 is a replacement overhauled engine (231 hours total at overhaul) while engine No. 1 is the original engine.

All the components of the rotor drive system (main transmission intermediate, and tail gearboxes), as well as the rotor head swash plate, and flight control servos, had been replaced at least once since the start of the all-weather tests.

Approximate airframe and major component times after this run were as follows:

|                            | Hours |
|----------------------------|--------------|
| Aircraft flight time       | 203          |
| Engine No. 1               | 222          |
| Engine No. 2               | 161          |
| APP                        | 1            |
