Preface

The Sexual Assault Prevention and Response Office in the Office of the Secretary of Defense selected the RAND Corporation to provide a new and independent evaluation of sexual assault, sexual harassment, and gender discrimination across the U.S. military. The U.S. Department of Defense (DoD) asked the RAND research team to redesign the approach used in previous DoD surveys, if changes would improve the accuracy and validity of the survey results for estimating the prevalence of sexual crimes and violations. In the summer of 2014, RAND fielded a new survey as part of the RAND Military Workplace Study.

This annex to Volume 5 in our series contains detailed tabular results for risk of sexual assault and sexual harassment across military installations and major commands. The complete series that collectively describes the study methodology and its findings includes, to date, the following reports:

- Sexual Assault and Sexual Harassment in the U.S. Military: Top-Line Estimates for Active-Duty Service Members from the 2014 RAND Military Workplace Study
- Sexual Assault and Sexual Harassment in the U.S. Military: Top-Line Estimates for Active-Duty Coast Guard Members from the 2014 RAND Military Workplace Study

Statistical Analysis and Reporting Conventions Used in This Report

The following tables provide estimates for the average sexual assault or sexual harassment risk that U.S. service members experience at installations or major commands. Data used to construct these estimates derive from the RAND Military Workplace Study (RMWS), which included a survey of more than 140,000 active-component service members in 2014, and from data on the entire active-component force provided by the Defense Manpower Data Center. Therefore, the tables describe risk to active-component personnel only, not civilians or members of the reserve component. The tables provide estimates for total installation (or command) risk and installation-specific (or command-specific) risk. An installation's (or command's) total risk is the average risk of sexual assault (or sexual harassment) experienced by service members whose duty units were assigned to it during fiscal year (FY) 2014. Members who were assigned to multiple installations over the year have their risk allocated to each installation proportionally.

Installations can have high total risk because personnel at the installation are young, more junior ranking, or have other demographic or service history characteristics that place them at elevated risk. However, some installations (or commands) have total risk that is higher or lower than the risk that would be expected based on the demographic and service histories of their personnel. We define installation-specific risk as the difference between total risk and the risk expected based on the demographic or service history characteristics of an installation's personnel.

The tables also estimate the total number of sexual assaults at each installation (or command) during FY 2014. A negative number of sexual assaults means that the installation-specific or command-specific risk was negative or that the installation or command was associated with a protective effect, meaning the average risk of its personnel was below what would be expected based on their demographic and service history characteristics.

To protect the confidentiality of RMWS survey respondents, the tables list only installations or commands that had at least 50 RMWS respondents of a given gender and service branch and that had an average monthly census of 100 personnel of the same gender and service branch. Smaller installations or clusters of personnel are aggregated by postal zone, size, country, or city across the various tables.

Two sets of tables in Parts A and B of this annex describe risk in different ways. The first set of tables provides estimates of risk by installation. The second set provides estimates of risk by major command. Each of these sets of estimates adopts a different strategy for aggregating small units or installations. When presenting these cluster means, we also present a 95-percent Bayesian credibility interval (CI) that corresponds to the 2.5th and 97.5th percentiles of the cluster's posterior distribution; these appear in the tables in parentheses and are separated by a comma. There is a 95-percent chance that the true value lies within this range.<sup>1</sup> These CIs may be asymmetric around the cluster mean when the uncertainty is asymmetric.

Part A shows sexual assault risk at large installations, and Part B shows sexual harassment risk at large installations. Part C shows the crosswalk of zip codes and installation names, and Part D provides a directory of major command codes (MCCs) and associated large commands.

PART D

Directory of Major Command Codes and Associated Large Commands

---

Note on Major Command Codes and Large Commands

Large commands were identified using data provided to RAND by the Defense Manpower Data Center on each sample member's "parent MCC." For the Army, Navy, and Air Force, these MCCs correspond to the service's own two-letter codes designating major commands, but with a letter added to distinguish the command codes of each service. For instance, the Army War College command is designated by the Army with the code TW. Adding the letter "A," to differentiate an Army code, makes the parent MCC for the War College ATW.

For the Marine Corps, MCC does not stand for major command code. Rather, it stands for monitored command code, which RAND tried to aggregate into the Marine Corps' Command Monitored Command Codes (CMCCs) using procedures described in Chapter Two of the main report. These codes do not correspond to Marine Corps major commands, but often to lower-level organizational units. We do not have access to official Marine Corps designations for these units. Instead, therefore, we created labels for each based on individual units aggregated within CMCCs, and the tables in this part provide a complete list of the units we aggregated under each such units.
