14. ABSTRACT This FY 2021 Update is the 3 rd update to the original Taxonomy of Injuries* report at: 1) A Taxonomy of Injuries for Public Health Monitoring and Reporting ; with Addendum 1 and Addendum 2 (Body Regions and Injury Types. through Fiscal Year 2018) available at https://apps.dtic.mil/docs/citations/AD1039481 2) The FY 2019 Update is available at https://apps.dtic.mil/docs/citations/AD1064894 3) The FY 2020 Update is available at https://apps.dtic.mil/sti/citations/AD1084570 * The injury taxonomy defines “all injuries” monitored by the Army and defines different types of injuries based on causal energy sources (i.e., mechanical/kinetic energy, environmental (heat, cold), poisoning/chemical exposures, etc.). Because Army surveillance uses medical diagnoses in Soldiers’ electronic health records, the taxonomy injury definition is operationalized with over 12,000 specific medical diagnostic codes (International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision, Clinical Modification (ICD-10-CM)). Each year the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) updates the ICD-10-CM codes. These APHC taxonomy updates are to document any changes to the Army injury codes as well as non-injury codes used to depict the annual distribution of all Active Duty soldiers’ medical encounters, characterized as the burden of 16 medical diagnoses categories (injury and 15 other categories).

2 PURPOSE

The purpose of this Army Public Health Center (APHC) fiscal year (FY) 2021 taxonomy of injuries update is to document changes to the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision, Clinical Modification (ICD-10-CM) diagnoses codes that are captured in the taxonomy of injuries [References 1].

Changes reflect the annual additions, deletions, or modifications to all ICD-10-CM diagnoses codes as determined by the World Health Organization (WHO) and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) [Reference 5]. The APHC documents the changes to all ICD-10-CM codes (injury and non-injury) annually [References 2, 3, 4] to establish the methodological basis for injury surveillance and epidemiological studies, including characterizing the annual medical burden of injuries in the context of all other medical diagnosis categories [References 6, 7].

3 BACKGROUND

3.1 Injury definition and diagnosis codes.

The APHC defines injury as bodily damage caused by the instantaneous or gradual transfer of mechanical, chemical, electrical, radiological energy to the body or the restricted transfer of an essential element such as oxygen [References 1-3]. Medical outcomes include damage caused by acute trauma, overuse, poisonings, extreme temperatures, or other environmental or man-made hazards.

The APHC uses the injury taxonomy to categorize all injuries based on the causal form and source of energy and has uniquely associated each applicable ICD-10-CM injury diagnosis code to a single energy type (e.g., mechanical—acute trauma and cumulative micro-trauma, environmental (heat/light, cold), poisoning, etc. The APHC taxonomy also aligns all ICD-10-CM injury diagnosis codes with a standardized list of body regions and nature of injury types adapted from existing matrices. To date, the APHC has published the original taxonomy report which included the FY18 codes [Reference 1] and two separate updates [References 3 and 4].

When reporting routine surveillance for U.S. military populations, the APHC presents data showing the comparative impact in terms of numbers of medical encounters, persons affected, and hospital bed days for all medical visits [References 6-7]. Injuries, as defined by the APHC injury taxonomy, have historically been shown to have the largest burden among Army Soldiers in terms of medical encounters and persons affected. All other non-injury diagnoses are grouped by the APHC into 15 non-injury categories (for total of 16 categories) which are further sub-categorized [References 3 and 4].

4 METHODS

The newly implemented FY2021 ICD-10-CM diagnosis codes were obtained from CDC and aligned with the APHC's existing (FY 2020) code list [Reference 4]. Codes that met the definition of injury and aligned codes with causal energy types, injury types, and body regions, in accordance with methodology and definitions described in the original taxonomy report [Reference 1]. All new codes, injury and non-injury, were also aligned with the burden categories and sub-categories. This year, the methodology relied entirely on aligning new codes with the previous years' categorization of similar "parent codes."

5 RESULTS & FINDINGS

The FY21 ICD-10-CM code revisions, effective October 1, 2020, represent the fifth update since the use of ICD-10-CM codes became a requirement for U.S. medical practice on October 1, 2015. ICD-10-CM codes are divided into 21 chapters which group similar diagnosis types together. For this FY2021 CDC update, there were a total of 590 changes to ICD-10-CM codes: 487 new codes, 46 revised codes and 57 deactivated codes (NOTE: these included changes to diagnosis codes and also "procedure" and "cause" codes) [Reference 5]. Of the 487 new codes, 52 were incident injury diagnosis codes and 66 codes describe subsequent (follow-up) injury encounters, sequelae to injuries, or long-term effects of MSK injuries.

The new, revised, and deactivated codes were updated in the APHC's master Injury Taxonomy Excel® spreadsheet (October 2020) along with corresponding injury categories, sub-categories, body regions, and injury types. Table 1 summarizes the new codes that were identified as incident injuries. There are now a total of 12,925 active ICD-10-CM incident diagnosis codes that meet the APHC taxonomy definition of injury. [NOTE: An additional 50 incident injury codes have been deactivated between FY18-6-FY20, but these codes are still captured in historical surveillance data].

When categorizing the new corneal transplant codes, it was clear that Body Region 1 as "Head & Neck" and Body Region 2 as "Eye" was most appropriate. However, it was realized that previous iterations of these codes were categorized differently as "multiple" body regions; these have now been updated such that historical use of the deleted codes will be correctly categorized as Eye injuries.

Table 2 presents the current naming convention for the sixteen APHC standard burden categories and how they align with the AFHSD categories as well as the ICD-10-CM chapters. No changes were made to the categories or descriptions from the FY2020 update [Reference 4]. Appendix B provides a list of the new and revised ICD-10-CM injury and non-injury diagnosis codes along with the assigned burden categories and sub-categories for each.

6 CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The master APHC injury taxonomy Excel® spreadsheet, updated to reflect the new ICD-10-CM diagnosis codes and APHC injury surveillance categories as described in this document, is available upon request. This most recent updated taxonomy code list is necessary for evaluating medical encounter data after ICD-10-CM update, effective October 1, 2021. All ICD-10-CM records used after 1 October 2015 are included in this master updated list.

It is recommended that APHC presentations of the annual Burden of Injury and Illness be complied in accordance with categorizations described by this report and the APHC burden dictionary.
