SUMMARY

In the two decades since they have become a prominent part of the intercity transportation picture, the more than 3,000 truckstops located along the nation's highway system have proven themselves to be an invaluable source of emergency assistance to travelers and commercial truckers in natural disasters. The success of truckstops in coping with past emergencies suggests that these support facilities might profitably be incorporated in current and future emergency plans developed at federal, state and local levels. One set of emergency planning efforts currently being undertaken by all government levels addresses the possibility of evacuating major U.S. cities in the face of natural disasters or nuclear attack. This report investigates the potential role of the nation's truckstop network in such an evacuation, or crisis relocation.

In addressing the potential role of truckstops under crisis relocation conditions, a directory of 2,682 primary and secondary truckstops has been assembled. Profiles of typical truckstop activities have been developed, and the role of truckstops in providing relief for travelers during severe winters and hurricane warnings has been chronicled. It is estimated that truckstops supply about 68 percent of the diesel fuel used by tractor-trailer combinations in moving the nation's intercity cargo. Most of the remaining fuel is distributed through the pumps of private retail fleets and general freight carriers large enough to maintain their own terminal networks. Additional research is needed to ascertain the nature and location of these private terminal networks and to assess their potential role in time of crisis.

An analysis of the location of the 2,682 truckstops surveyed in this investigation reveals that nearly 70 percent of these truckstops could be expected to survive a nuclear attack. The relative invulnerability of truckstops to attack, coupled with their importance in the day-to-day movement of intercity cargo make them a valuable resource in any crisis relocation plan. Under crisis relocation conditions, certain truckstops located within risk areas would be designated as critical and would remain open with minimal staffing during and after relocation. Other risk-area truckstops would remain open so long as their fuel supplies last during the three-day relocation effort and shut down on the final day of relocation. Truckstops located within the host areas would be designated as emergency control centers for intercity cargo movement. In addition to their traditional roles as fueling points, these control centers would also act as: (1) checkpoints for rerouting or reassignment of essential shipments; (2) interim consignment points for non-essential shipments; (3) relay points for drivers; (4) coordination and reassignment points for power units and drivers; and (5) central assignment points for mechanics.

This report develops guidelines for the disposition of intercity cargo shipments under crisis conditions, and estimates the stress placed on the parking areas, fuel tanks, and other facilities of host-area truckstops participating in a massive relocation effort. Guidelines for the disposition of shipments and for alleviating stress at critical truckstops have been incorporated in the overall guidance for transportation support of a crisis relocation strategy developed separately by SYSTAN for use by DCPA planners. A summary of the contents of this overall guidance appears in Exhibit S.1.

To make maximum use of truckstops as an emergency resource, an attempt should be made to form a voluntary organization of truckstop owners capable of providing an emergency fueling capability for vehicles and havens of rescue for drivers and passengers in times of crisis. Such an organization would work within the framework of state and local emergency planning charters, supplement the current emergency response capability of the trucking industry, enhance the emergency preparedness posture of the country at little cost to the government, and help ensure that the nation's most versatile mode of freight transportation would continue to operate efficiently in times of stress.

Following relocation, only critical stations will remain open.</li> <li>* Non-critical stations with fuel remaining following relocation should deposit keys with public safety officials so that inventories can be used to support movement of critical workers &amp; commodities.</li> <li>* Stations should observe rationing controls &amp; odd/even regulations established nationally during pre-crisis period &amp; evacuation period.</li> <li>* Strengthen critical pipeline terminals and refineries on fringes of target area against attack.</li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>* Supplies to stations along evacuation routes will be bolstered. These stations should remain open around the clock during relocation.</li> <li>* Where appropriate, host area pipeline terminals should be used to advantage in diverting flow of motor fuel.</li> <li>* Following relocation, deliveries to bulk terminals &amp; gasoline stations will be stepped up to meet relocated demand &amp; to develop fuel stockpiles in less vulnerable locales.</li> <li>* Stations should observe rationing controls, odd/even regulations, &amp; any purchase restrictions established nationally before &amp; after relocation.</li> <li>* Construct expedient fuel storage facilities where necessary.</li> </ul>

1. INTRODUCTION

With the completion of large sections of the nation's interstate highway network in the early 1960's, the motor carrier displaced the railroad as the dominant mode of intercity freight transportation, measured in terms of total tonnage carried. As intercity truck traffic increased in importance, a network of support facilities grew up alongside the interstate highway system. These support facilities, commonly called truckstops, are self-contained units capable of providing a variety of fueling and support services in times of emergency. The importance of truckstops in emergencies has been demonstrated in a variety of crisis situations, ranging from sudden Gulf Coast hurricanes to severe Northeast winters.

The success of truckstops in coping with past emergencies on an ad hoc basis suggests that these support facilities might profitably be incorporated in current and future emergency plans developed at the federal, state and local levels. One set of emergency planning efforts currently being undertaken at all governmental levels focuses on the possibility of evacuating major U.S. cities in the face of threatened nuclear attack. This report investigates the potential role of truckstops in such an evacuation, or crisis relocation. As part of the investigation, the report contains an overview of the nation's truckstop network; state-by-state inventories of individual truckstops; assessments of current and future emergency activities appropriate for truckstops; and recommendations for a nationwide organization of truckstop owners capable of providing emergency support in areas threatened by natural or nuclear disasters.

1.1 BACKGROUND ON THE CRISIS RELOCATION STRATEGY

The all-hazard, all-contingency civil preparedness program now under study by the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency (DCPA) recognizes two basic strategies for protecting populations threatened by major hazards:

One is to provide the best protection possible with the population essentially in place, at or near their homes, schools, and places of work. The second is for people to leave the threatened area if time allows (Reference 1).

While the strategy of protection in place remains the primary strategy for defense under nuclear attack conditions, the all-hazard, all-contingency civil preparedness program recognizes the need to plan for the contingency of relocating the population from high-risk areas during periods of severe international crisis. Four primary arguments support the need to plan for crisis relocation:

- It is probable that a nuclear attack upon the United States will be preceded by a crisis build-up of sufficient duration to permit population relocation from high-risk areas.

- If an adversary's cities were to be evacuated during a period of crisis, U.S. cities should also be evacuated.
- It is likely that many citizens will leave large cities in the face of crisis in a "spontaneous evacuation," whether or not they are advised to do so.
- Crisis relocation has been proven feasible in recent large-scale evacuations in the face of hurricane warnings.

The movement of large masses of population in advance of a threatened attack will severely test national and local transportation resources. Plans for evacuating populations, maintaining essential governmental and private services, and transporting critical workers all hinge upon the availability, maintenance, and control of the nation's fuel resources, transportation fleet, and road and rail networks. Past research undertaken by SYSTAN (Reference 2) assessed the transportation requirements accompanying crisis relocation; inventoried existing levels of vehicle availability, roadway capacity, and fuel supplies; identified potential bottlenecks resulting from an inability of the system to support crisis relocation requirements; investigated methods of upgrading system performance under conditions of crisis relocation; and developed guidelines for providing transportation support for the crisis relocation strategy.

A more recent SYSTAN study, Postattack Impacts of the Crisis Relocation Strategy on Transportation Systems (Reference 3), extends the previous research by (1) investigating the effects of a nuclear attack on the reconfigured transportation system and the relocated population, (2) identifying and evaluating alternative means of providing transportation system support following such an attack, and (3) reviewing existing relocation guidance in the light of probable postattack consequences. In recognition of the growing importance of truckstops in intercity traffic movement, and their potential importance in any crisis relocation effort, the DCPA further extended the previous research to include a detailed analysis of the role of truckstops in crisis relocation planning; the present report, written as a companion volume to References 2 and 3, is the result of this analysis.

1.2 OBJECTIVES

The specific objectives of the research described in this report have been:

- To develop a comprehensive, consolidated inventory of U.S. truckstop locations and facilities;
- To assess the potential role of truckstops in crisis relocation; and

- To develop and evaluate various criteria for the selection of truckstops to be included in the civil defense transport network.

1.3 REPORT ORGANIZATION

This report provides an overview of the nation's truckstop network, assembles state-by-state inventories of individual truckstops, assesses the potential role of these truckstops in the event of a crisis relocation, and recommends the formation of a nationwide emergency organization of truckstop owners. Chapter 2 presents an overview of the nation's truckstop network which includes a typical truckstop profile, an assessment of the relative importance of truckstops in intercity freight movement, and a review of past emergency activities undertaken by truckstop operators. Chapter 3 describes the location of individual truckstops throughout the country and assess their vulnerability to nuclear attack. Chapter 4 outlines tentative guidelines for the operation of truckstops and the disposition of intercity cargo under emergency conditions, and assesses the relative demands imposed on truckstops following these guidelines. Chapter 5 recommends steps toward the formation of a nationwide organization of truckstop owners capable of providing emergency support in areas threatened by natural or nuclear disasters.

Four appendices support the analytic discussion in the body of the report. Appendix A contains a computer-produced listing of characteristic data for each of 2,682 truckstops, arranged by state. Appendix B provides details on the relative importance of truckstops in fueling intercity cargo trucks, while Appendix C contains a list of those commodities and industries judged to be essential for population support or economic survival during a crisis relocation. Finally, Appendix D contains a sample memorandum of understanding between a state and an emergency association of transportation officials.

2. OVERVIEW OF THE TRUCKSTOP NETWORK

This chapter presents an overview of the nation's truckstop network which includes a statistical profile of a typical truckstop, an assessment of the relative importance of truckstops in intercity freight movement, and a brief review of the role of truckstops in alleviating past emergency situations. Statistical information contained in this chapter comes from two major sources:

1. A survey conducted for SYSTAN by the National Transportation Fueling Corporation in early 1977 which identified and classified a total of 2,682 truckstops scattered throughout the United States (see Appendix A).
2. An in-depth survey of the operations of 152 truckstops conducted by Laventhol and Horwath for the National Association of Truckstop Operators (NATSO) in 1975 (Reference 4).

Exhibit 2.1 plots the location of the 2,682 truckstops identified in the SYSTAN survey. This exhibit clearly shows the wide expanse of the nation's truckstop network, and the concentration of locations along the major intercity shipping routes.

2.1 PROFILE OF A TYPICAL TRUCKSTOP

The typical truckstop is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 52 weeks a year, and offers far more than fuel to its trucking customers. In addition to fuel, truckstops offer garage and maintenance facilities, overnight parking space, sleeping accommodations, restaurant operations, retail stores, and a variety of communications services.

2.1.1 Typical Characteristics

The in-depth survey conducted by the National Association of Truckstop Operators (NATSO; Reference 4) showed that, of the 152 truckstops responding:

1. 100% were open for fuel sales and service work 24 hours per day, year-round;
2. 85% had been constructed after 1960, with 32% being constructed after 1970;
3. 77% service passenger cars as well as trucks;
4. 75% were located along an interstate highway, while 20% were located along another major highway and 5% were located within an urban area; and

EXHIBIT 2.1: U.S. TRUCKSTOP LOCATIONS

5. 65% were independently owned and operated, while the remainder were operated as part of a chain.

The average truckstop surveyed:

1. Occupied 10.9 acres, of which 7.7 acres are parking;
2. Had a replacement value of $870,000 in 1975;
3. Operated eight diesel pumps and seven gasoline pumps; and
4. Pumped 3.1 million gallons of diesel fuel and 0.6 million gallons of gasoline in 1975, or about 5 gallons of diesel fuel for every gallon of gasoline.

The busiest day for truckstop owners along interstate routes and major highways is Wednesday, while Tuesday was the busiest day reported by a limited sampling of truckstop owners in urban areas. The busiest time of the 24-hour service period for all truckstops is the hour between 5:00 and 6:00 P.M.

Most large truckstops require several truckloads of fuel daily to replenish their fuel supplies. It is estimated that the reserves of these larger truckstops would be depleted in two days of normal activity if incoming supplies were cut off.

2.1.2 Typical Services Offered

The range of services offered by the truckstops surveyed in Reference 4 is reflected in Table 2.1. Although a few truckstops offering sleeping facilities have dormitory accommodations, the vast majority (87%) offer private rooms. The median number of private rooms available is eleven, while the median percent occupancy is 70%.

In addition to the communications equipment listed in Table 2.1, nearly all truckstops operate CB radios and monitor the local airwaves, to keep track of distress calls and local highway conditions. CB radios are also a key item stocked by those truckstops with retail outlets on the premises.

A variety of fuel brands are sold at the truckstops throughout the country. The leading brand is Union 76, which pioneered in the development of truckstops shortly after the inauguration of the Interstate Highway system, and which maintains a nationwide network of 600 Class I truckstops. Exhibit 2.2 presents an aerial view of a Union 76 truckstop on I-95 in Paulsboro, New Jersey, showing the expanse of land and facilities devoted to servicing intercity cargo vehicles.

2.2 RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF TRUCKSTOPS IN INTERCITY CARGO MOVEMENT

It is estimated that truckstops supply about 68 percent of all diesel fuel used by tractor-trailer combinations in intercity operations and about 56 percent of total diesel fuel used in both intercity and urban operations. Details of these estimates may be found in Appendix B. Typically, truckstop users include most common carriers of household goods and special commodities, smaller carriers of general freight, and specialized private carriers serving large territories from a single home base. Most large and many medium-size common carriers (classified as Class I and Class II by the Interstate Commerce Commission) transporting general freight nationally or regionally maintain their own network of terminals and use truckstops only infrequently. Private retail fleets and chain operations such as Sears and Safeway tend to make relatively short trips and refuel at their respective home base.

2.2.1 Carriers Which Use Truckstops

Large and medium-sized (Class I and II) carriers of special commodities and household goods, Class III (under $500,000 annual revenue) carriers of general freight, and intrastate carriers do not usually maintain extensive terminal networks, and may have only a single home terminal where units are serviced, refueled and repaired. These common carriers use truckstops extensively. In addition, privately-owned carriers for companies serving large territories from a single home base rely heavily on truckstops. Manufacturers, large wholesalers, chemical plants, and food processors are examples of such companies. Those general freight carriers using truckstops tend to be small- and medium-size operations; about half are owner-operators with only one truck. Large general freight carriers will also use truckstops on weekends and holidays, and at other times when their own terminals are inconvenient.

2.2.2 Carriers Which Do Not Use Truckstops

Most Class I and many Class II carriers transporting general freight nationally or regionally have terminals along their routes which provide some of the same services for their own drivers and vehicles as truckstops provide for other trucks. A large Class I carrier may have several dozen terminals dotted across the country. Major terminals in the large metropolitan areas generally have a refueling capability, a garage capable of handling major vehicle repairs, loading and unloading facilities, and communications facilities (telex, radio) enabling them to communicate with other terminals in the system as well as with units on the road. Relatively few general freight carrier firms provide sleeping accommodations for their drivers. Moreover, economic considerations and union restrictions prevent 24-hour operation of these terminals, which are often closed over weekends and holidays.

Satellite terminals in smaller cities along ICC-designated routes served by the larger general freight carriers are smaller than parent terminals and have loading and unloading facilities and a communication capability. Some have fueling capability and some do not, but they generally do not have truck repair facilities.

In general, large general freight carriers use their own facilities whenever possible. Each driver leaving the home base has a fuel plan for the entire length of the trip, specifying where he will stop for fuel and how many gallons will be obtained at each point. Usually, he will refuel at the company's terminals. On those sections of his route where no company-owned terminals are available, or where company-owned terminals are closed at the time of his passage, he will refuel at a truckstop or at a contract supplier. The contract supplier may be one of two types: a supplier which supplies a relatively few carriers on a contract basis only and accepts no off-the-road business; or a truckstop which supplies the carrier according to a specific fuel purchase agreement, in addition to serving individual off-the-road trucks on a no-contract basis.

A number of economic considerations underlie the reliance of major general freight carriers on their own terminal network. A few of these considerations are briefly discussed below.

1. Lower cost of fuel purchased directly from oil companies. There is a considerable cost-saving in bulk purchases of fuel for the carriers' own terminals. In addition, supplying oil companies will often help a carrier put in a tank for fuel at the carrier's terminal by providing full or partial financing. Of course, this is advantageous to the refiner, since any agreement would specify that all fuel must be purchased from that refiner.
2. Large fuel capacity of trucks. The high fuel capacity of large combination trucks of the regional or national carrier often makes refueling at truckstops unnecessary. Large trucks can carry more than 200-250 gallons of fuel, making it possible to travel 1000-1250 miles without refueling, and decreasing the need to stop at terminals not under company ownership. The general freight carriers, of course, can serve only those routes authorized by the ICC, and can therefore place their terminals on those routes as required.
3. Charges by Drivers. It is in the best interests of the carrier that the unit be "ready to roll" when it is given to the driver. Therefore, fueling is carried out at the carrier's terminal before the driver begins logging his time. If a driver, at the carrier's request, stops at a truckstop to refuel, the carrier is required to pay him for his time and, in addition, the driver may make an additional charge for this refueling stop. If the driver stops at a truckstop for coffee or rest, it is on his own time and he is not paid by the carrier.

In addition to larger general freight carriers, private retail fleets and chain operators such as Sears and Safeway tend to make relatively short trips from a regional base at which most refueling occurs. Although slightly more than half of the diesel fuel used in moving intercity and local cargo comes from truckstops, terminals of private operators pump most of the remaining supply, including a large share of the fuel used to move essential general freight cargo and to transport food from wholesale warehouses to retail outlets. Investigation of terminals maintained by private fleets was beyond the scope of the current study. However, future studies of fuel distribution under emergency conditions should be expanded to include these important fuel distribution elements.

2.3 CURRENT EMERGENCY ROLE

The proximity of the nation's truckstops to the interstate highway system, coupled with the wide range of services offered by these truckstops, makes the truckstop an ideal source of emergency aid for truckers and travelers on interstate and other major highways. During the severe snowstorms that blanketed the northeastern United States during the winters of 1976-77 and 1977-78, truckstop operators housed stranded travelers, coordinated truck convoys to ensure the safety of commercial cargo, monitored CB channels to identify critical situations, organized rescue operations, used snowmobiles to take fuel to stranded vehicles, and performed many other activities to protect the traveling public and keep commercial traffic moving. Truckstops also provided important emergency support during the evacuation of several Gulf Coast areas in the face of Hurricane Camille.

Perhaps because the development of a widespread network of truckstops is relatively recent, their role in emergency relief is not widely recognized. In an attempt to conserve fuel during the winter of 1976-77, the Governor of Virginia ordered that all businesses within the State were constrained to operate no more than 40 hours per week. Although bus stations and other terminals handling interstate commerce were exempted from this order, truckstops were not. Those truckstops within three miles of an interstate highway were allowed to operate their fuel pumps more than 40 hours a week, but the service departments, restaurants, wrecker service, and other support operations were originally restricted to the 40-hour limit. Moreover, truckstops more than three miles from an interstate highway could not operate over 40 hours at all. The Governor's order soon did more to halt truck movement in Virginia than the inclement weather. In one instance, NATSO reported that over 50 trucks were sitting idle in a truckstop because they couldn't get fuel to make their next scheduled checkpoint. Once the impact of restricted truckstop operations made itself felt and was publicized, the Governor rescinded the 40-hour rule in the case of truckstops. In the future, however, it is hoped that the unique and essential role of truckstops in interstate commerce will be recognized in advance of sweeping restrictions on business and commercial activity.

3. INVENTORY OF U.S. TRUCKSTOPS

This section summarizes the classification scheme used in inventorying major U.S. truckstops and uses the location data obtained in the inventory to assess the relative vulnerability of the nation's truckstop network to nuclear attack.

3.1 TRUCKSTOP LOCATIONS AND CHARACTERISTICS

A comprehensive inventory of major U.S. truckstops was developed for SYSTAN by the National Transportation Fueling Corporation in early 1977. For each of 2,682 separate truckstops, the following information was assembled:

1. Name;
2. Address;
3. Telephone Number; and
4. Fuel Brand Sold.

Each truckstop was further classified as either Primary (P) or Secondary (S) according to the following criteria:

P - Primary Locations

- Extensive parking (at least 100 units at highway locations)
- Restaurants (large, approximately 100 seats or more)
- Sleeping accommodations available (except toll road plazas)
- Full mechanical facilities
- Full communications facilities (including wire service)
- Ample fuel storage capabilities (at least 50,000 gallons)

S - Secondary Locations

- Adequate parking (at least 25 units for urban locations and 50 units at highway locations)
- Restaurants (smaller scale but adequate for location; approximately 30-50 seats)
- Basic mechanical facilities
- Basic communications facilities (may lack wire services)
- Sleeping accommodations (either directly available or adjacent)
- Adequate fuel storage capability (various from 20-25,000 gallons and upward)

The truckstop information, which has been assembled on a far broader scale than was previously available from any source, has been coded and computerized for easy sorting and access. Appendix A contains a computer-produced listing of characteristic data for each truckstop arranged by state. A sample page from Appendix A containing truckstop data from the State of Colorado appears in Exhibit 3.1. The location of the listed truckstops has also been plotted on detailed state and national maps.

3.2 RELATIVE VULNERABILITY OF U.S. TRUCKSTOPS

One important criterion for measuring the potential utility of truckstops in times of emergency is their vulnerability to nuclear attack. In order to assess this vulnerability, SYSTAN compared the geographic locations of each of the 2,682 truckstops identified in the comprehensive inventory of Appendix A with the blast and fallout diagrams contained in the DCPA publication entitled "High Risk Areas" (Reference 5). In this comparison, the truckstops which were well inside or well outside the blast and fallout effects of the attack specified in this publication were first identified. This rough initial identification process was used to sort out those truckstops which were either unaffected by the specified attack or which could be expected to suffer severe blast or fallout damage.

The initial sorting process also identified 100 truckstops which were on the fringes of blast areas. SYSTAN assembled the coordinates of these questionable stops and submitted them to DCPA for a detailed computerized damage assessment. The results of this damage assessment were then incorporated in the overall truckstop vulnerability assessment. As a result of this assessment, it was determined that 1,840 (68.63) of the truckstops would remain undamaged, while 23 (0.86) would sustain only slight damage. It was also determined that 757 (28.23) of the truckstops were located close enough to the center of the blast zones that they would not survive the postulated attack. An additional 62 truckstops (2.3%) were unaffected by the blast but subject to fallout effects. Since over 69 percent of U.S. truckstops can be expected to survive a nuclear attack with either no damage or very slight damage, it can be seen that truckstops constitute a relatively invulnerable element of the nation's transportation network. The truckstop vulnerability assessment is summarized on a state-by-state basis in Table 3.1.

4. POTENTIAL ROLE OF TRUCKSTOPS IN CRISIS RELOCATION PLANNING

The relative invulnerability of truckstops to nuclear attack, coupled with their importance in the day-to-day movement of intercity traffic, make them a pivotal resource in any crisis relocation plan. This chapter discusses the potential role of risk-area and host-area truckstops in support of a crisis relocation strategy, develops guidelines for the disposition of intercity cargo shipments under crisis conditions, and estimates the stress placed on the parking areas, fuel tanks, and other facilities of truckstops participating in a relocation effort.

4.1 EMERGENCY ACTIVITIES AT RISK- AND HOST-AREA TRUCKSTOPS

4.1.1 Risk-Area Truckstops

Roughly thirty percent of the nation's truckstops are located in or near designated risk areas and are themselves vulnerable to nuclear attack. General guidance for crisis relocation activities of these vulnerable truckstops parallels the guidance contained in previous SYSTAN work for all risk-area gasoline stations. (See References 2 and 3.) Certain truckstops located within risk areas would be designated as critical and would remain open with minimal staffing during and after relocation. Other risk area truckstops would remain open so long as their fuel supplies last during the three-day relocation effort and shut down on the final day of relocation, reporting any remaining fuel supplies to appropriate officials. Mechanics and other staff from those risk area truckstops to be closed following relocation would be reassigned to host area truckstops, which would control the bulk of intercity motor carrier movement during and after relocation.

4.1.2 Host Area Truckstops

In keeping with the general desire to make maximum use of existing channels in developing crisis relocation plans, truckstops located outside risk areas should be designated as emergency control centers for intercity cargo movement. In addition to their traditional roles as fueling points, these control centers would also act as:

- Checkpoints for the rerouting or reassignment of essential shipments;
- Interim consignment points for non-essential shipments;
- Relay points for drivers;
- Coordination and reassignment points for power units and drivers;
and

- Central assignment points for mechanics.

Subsequent sections of this chapter discuss these activities and address the ability of critical host-area truckstops to perform these activities under crisis conditions.

4.2 DISPOSITION OF INTERCITY SHIPMENTS

To date, little guidance has been developed to indicate the disposition of intercity cargo shipments under crisis relocation conditions. Past studies have focused on local transportation problems, since the increased distances involved in local distribution dictate that these problems are likely to be more acute. However, it is equally important to develop a set of guidelines for handling the intercity traffic feeding into the local distribution network. Using the network of host-area truckstops as a control base, it is possible to develop broad general guidelines for rerouting and reassigning intercity shipments in transit at the time a crisis relocation is ordered. This guidance will vary markedly depending on whether the shipments in transit are essential to the support of the population and the continued operation of the economy. The task of differentiating between essential and non-essential cargo is not always clear-cut, and past studies using different criteria have produced slightly different definitions of "essential" commodities and industries. The general criteria used in past studies of transportation requirements are outlined in Appendix C. For the purposes of the present discussion, it is simply assumed that relative agreement will exist regarding the distinction between essential and non-essential shipments. Given such agreement, Exhibit 4.1 outlines basic rules for the disposition of both essential and non-essential shipments under crisis relocation conditions.

4.2.1 Disposition of Essential Intercity Shipments

Basic rules for the disposition of essential intercity shipments under crisis relocation conditions appear at the top of Exhibit 4.1. Drivers carrying essential intercity cargo destined for a risk area should proceed to deliver the cargo to its destination if they are within that risk area at the time the relocation is ordered. They should then contact their system dispatcher for their next assignment. The dispatcher should be in communication with the motor transport coordinator of the transport agency responsible for coordinating risk-area cargo movement during the relocation (see Reference 3, Guidelines and Prototype Plans). If no reassignment is immediately forthcoming, the driver should refuel and take his vehicle to the nearest host-area truckstop to await reassignment. Under no circumstances should a driver attempt to lay over within a risk area, even if that risk area contains his own home terminal.

DISPOSITION OF INTERCITY CARGO VEHICLES
UNDER CRISIS RELOCATION CONDITIONS

Intercity drivers carrying essential shipments destined for risk areas who are outside that risk area at the time of relocation should contact their dispatcher immediately for information regarding possible reassignment or rerouting of that cargo. Delivery of most essential shipments should proceed as expeditiously as possible. In some cases, however, shipments may be reassigned from risk areas to host areas, or it may be necessary to reroute traffic around intervening risk areas.

Drivers with essential cargo destined for host-area locations should proceed to deliver that cargo, rerouting as necessary to avoid passing through intervening risk areas. Intercity drivers with empty trailers laying over in risk areas at the time of relocation should contact their dispatchers and, if an immediate assignment to pick up an essential cargo within the risk area is not forthcoming, refuel and proceed to the nearest host-area truckstop to await reassignment.

4.2.2 Disposition of Non-Essential Intercity Shipments

No shipments of non-essential goods should be initiated once the relocation order is given. Of those shipments on the road at the time the order is given, the only non-essential shipments to be delivered should be those destined for host areas and those already inside that risk area which serves as their final destination. All other drivers hauling non-essential goods should report to their dispatchers and proceed to the nearest host area truckstop. There the trailer and its cargo will generally be stored while the driver and power unit may be reassigned to supplement local or intercity transportation requirements. In some emergency situations, the cargo may be off-loaded to free the entire vehicle, but such instances will presumably be rare during the relocation period, as few shortages of intercity carriers are anticipated, and only an estimated 10 percent of all truckstops have warehouse facilities on-site.

It should be explained that any reassignment of drivers and equipment is best accomplished by motor carrier dispatchers and personnel, rather than truckstop personnel. The motor carrier personnel have extensive experience in matching shipping requirements with limited labor and equipment. Similarly, truckstops should not act unilaterally in deciding to off-load non-essential shipments. In the rare instances in which cargo is off-loaded, it should be done with the concurrence of the carrier, who is responsible for the shipment and who is insured against loss or damage in transit.

4.3 STRESS ON CRITICAL HOST-AREA TRUCKSTOPS

In addition to providing fuel for an increased portion of intercity freight movements during the crisis relocation period, critical host-area truckstops will act as checkpoints for the rerouting or reassignment of essential shipments, interim consignment points for non-es-essential shipments, relay points for drivers, coordination and reassignment points for power units and trailers, and central assignment points for mechanics. Since truckstops pump an estimated 68% of the fuel used by intercity motor carriers, many drivers would ordinarily be stopping at these truckstops as part of their normal route plan, and the proposed emergency guidelines represent a relatively small deviation from "business as usual" for these drivers. Since a significant portion of intercity truckers are destined for private terminals or for risk-area truckstops, however, guidance directing these truckers to host-area truckstops can be expected to put significant additional stress on the fuel tanks, parking space, and support facilities of these truckstops. The extent of this additional stress will vary from location to location, but certain average levels may be estimated.

If all intercity truck traffic were to be redirected to critical host-area truckstops, the potential business of an individual host-area truckstop might be expected to more than double. This can be illustrated by the following rough approximation of the potential relocation business for a host-area truckstop:

Normal Business X

$$\frac{\text{Total Number of Truckstops}}{\text{Host Area Truckstops}} \times \frac{\text{Total Intercity Fuel Sales}}{\text{Truckstop Fuel Sales}}$$

$$= \frac{\text{Normal Business}}{.71 \times .68}$$

$$= 2.07 \times (\text{Normal Business})$$

This estimate represents a nationwide approximation. The ratio of potential relocation business to normal business would be much higher in California and in the Northeastern United States, where a higher percentage of truckstops are located within risk areas. Given the size of the potential increase in the business expected at critical host area truckstops, then, certain measures must be taken to avoid swamping specific truckstops. A few such measures are discussed in the following paragraphs.

4.3.1 Parking Requirements

As critical host-area truckstops become control centers for the intercity shipment of essential goods, and as non-essential shipments and their vans accumulate in those centers, parking requirements may double and the parking space available at the typical truckstop may be expected to be inadequate to meet the demands placed upon it. A rough rule of thumb indicates that 18 units per acre may be parking comfortably at a truckstop, with each tractor-trailer combination having sufficient freedom of movement so that it can move out at any time without disturbing other units. The number of units per acre may be approximately doubled to 36 units per acre, if units are parked axle-to-axle and bumper-to-bumper with no maneuvering room. One option for making the most of the parking space at each truckstop is to park trailers with non-essential goods, closely spaced, on the less accessible portions of each truckstop's parking acreage. Another option would be to park trailers with non-essential goods off the truckstop premises. Each host area plan will contain a listing of available open areas which might be used for parking space, along with an estimate of the space required to accommodate relocating automobiles (see Reference 2). Trailers with densely-packed loads of non-essential goods might be parked close to the exposed walls of congregate-care facilities to provide an additional measure of expedient fallout protection for evacuees.

4.3.2 Fuel Requirements

Although the parking requirements of a host-area truckstop may more than double, the curtailment of non-essential shipments during the crisis will limit the corresponding increase in fuel requirements. Estimates indicate that 62% of intercity truck traffic is comprised of essential goods that would continue to be shipped during the crisis period (see Reference 2). Accordingly, while the traffic at a typical host area truckstop might be multiplied by a factor of 2.07 if all intercity shipments are passed through these control points, fuel requirements would be multiplied by a lesser factor of 1.28 (that is,  $.62 \times 2.07$ ) as non-essential shipments are sidetracked and power units and drivers are reassigned to the movement of essential goods. To accommodate this increase in fuel requirements:

1. Fuel allotments of critical host area truckstops should be increased at the expense of shipments to risk area gasoline stations and non-critical truckstops located within the risk area. This reallocation process should be incorporated in the state and local crisis relocation plans.
2. Trucks in the risk area at the time the relocation begins should be encouraged to refuel at risk area terminals before proceeding to host area control points to await reassignment.

4.3.3 Additional Requirements

Requirements for such support functions as maintenance and communications at host area truckstops may be eased during the relocation period by reassigning personnel, particularly mechanics, from risk area truckstops and service stations. Where on-premises sleeping accommodations and restaurant facilities are limited, truckers and emergency service personnel should be given priority over the general public. The same priority concept would apply to vehicles. That is, trucks and emergency service vehicles would be given priority over the automobiles of the general public for purposes of refueling and other vehicle service functions.

5. TOWARD A NATIONWIDE EMERGENCY ORGANIZATION

In the two decades since they have become a prominent part of the intercity transportation picture, truckstops have proven themselves to be an invaluable source of emergency assistance to travelers and commercial truckers in natural disasters. They also represent a potentially valuable resource in the event of a crisis relocation. To make maximum use of this emergency resource, an attempt should be made to form a voluntary organization of truckstop owners capable of providing an emergency fueling capability for vehicles and havens of rescue for drivers and passengers in times of crisis. This organization would be formed without regard to brand name or company affiliation, since no single oil company or marketing combination of companies adequately covers the country, and since most truckstops are independently owned and operated. Minimum standards would be set for members to ensure that they would, in fact, play a significant role in emergency operations. An initial attempt to draft such standards might start with the criterion used to designate secondary truckstops in the survey of Appendix A. That is,

1. Adequate parking (at least 25 units at urban locations and 50 units at highway locations);
2. Restaurant availability (adequate for location -- approximately 30-50 seats);
3. Basic mechanical facilities;
4. Basic communications facilities (may lack wire services);
5. Sleeping accommodations (either directly available or adjacent); and
6. Adequate fuel storage (at least 20,000 gallons).

5.1 STRUCTURE AND ELEMENTS OF THE PROPOSED ORGANIZATION

A voluntary association of truckstops organized for the purpose of providing emergency fuel and support services could be patterned after the National Defense Transportation Association (NDTA), in which representatives of the transportation industry are organized at the state and local levels and bound to the public providers of emergency services at these levels by joint memoranda of understanding. A sample memorandum of understanding appears in Appendix D. A truckstop organization might possibly be affiliated with the U.S. Department of Transportation's Office of Emergency Transportation, function as a branch of the NDTA, act through a national trade organization such as NATSO or, like most of the truckstop operators themselves, operate independently. The National Transportation Fueling Corporation, an independent non-profit organization, was recently formed to provide a framework for an emergency network of truckstops. Mr. E.J. Slibeck, the president of this organization, participated in the development of the earliest truckstops and has long been an advocate of such a network.

Whatever affiliation might be selected for the proposed organization, it is important that the organization be incorporated into the emergency response capability of the trucking industry as a whole and included in the existing emergency plans of states and cities. The means for directing the trucking industry itself in an emergency currently exists in a Memorandum of Understanding between the American Trucking Association (ATA) and the Department of Defense. Before the advent of truckstops, the infrastructure "...of the trucking industry, with its state associations, conferences and rate barriers,...repeatedly demonstrated its ability to respond to disaster." (Reference 6)

It is equally important that the proposed truckstop organization be recognized by federal, state and local governments and included in existing emergency plans. Truckers and truckstop owners cannot act unilaterally in any official capacity, and their role in an emergency will be limited to that which is authorized by the civil government through emergency planning documents and memoranda of understanding.

Truckstops belonging to the proposed organization would be designated as emergency fueling points and rescue havens by the federal government, and properly identified through the use of placards visible from the roadway. The location of these truckstops would be catalogued, updated annually, and distributed to truckers and other interested parties. Exhibit 5.1 shows a suggested listing from the proposed directory of emergency truckstops. This listing is patterned after the National Directory of Union 76 Truckstops prepared annually by the Union Oil Company.

Member truckstops could be equipped with a power-generating set having a capacity of at least 50 percent of normal power requirements. This requirement translates into two 50KW generators for each primary truckstop, and two 20KW generators for each secondary truckstop. The current price for a 50KW generator is approximately $200 per KW, with an additional $1,000 charge for installation. Few existing truckstops are currently equipped with emergency generators. Exceptions are truckstops in such relatively isolated locations as St. Cloud, Minnesota and Cheyenne, Wyoming, which regularly face severe winter conditions.

Additional study should be devoted to the potential role of private carriers and privately-maintained terminals for large public carriers in such an organization. As part of CRP planning, the location and capabilities of large private terminals should be identified.

5.2 ADVANTAGES OF THE PROPOSED ORGANIZATION

An organization such as that described would add several billion dollars to the emergency preparedness posture of the country at little cost to the government, and help to ensure that the nation's most versatile mode of freight transportation will continue to operate efficiently in time of stress. Other specific advantages of the organization would include those listed below.

Recognition and Inclusion in Emergency Plans. A formal organization would bring truckstop representatives in contact with state and regional directors of emergency services and ensure that truckstop capabilities were recognized, included in emergency planning, and used efficiently in emergency situations. In this way, truckstops would become a recognized component of the existing framework of state and local emergency plans, and the likelihood that these plans would function efficiently during a crisis relocation would be increased.

SNAFU Avoidance. Recognition at the appropriate government levels would help to circumvent instances such as that occurring in Virginia during the winter of 1976-77 in which truckstop operations were actually curtailed under emergency conditions by a state executive edict that failed to exempt truckstops from a 40-hour limit on business activities.

Official Documentation. The memorandum of understanding, a legal document empowering truckstop operators to provide certain emergency services in support of public decisionmakers, helps to alleviate concern for the legal consequences of emergency activities.

Assured Emergency Fuel Supplies. The existence of emergency generators and operating agreements helps to ensure a steady supply of fuel under emergency allocations. It is hoped that government recognition of an emergency truckstop organization might also help to assure adequate supplies of fuel for member truckstops under conditions of nationwide fuel shortages. During the fuel shortage of 1974, when truckstops and common carrier terminals were officially put on a 70% allocation schedule from their suppliers, the demand for fuel actually increased at truckstops as those private and public carriers whose own supplies were restricted sent their vehicles to truckstops to obtain fuel.

Member Awareness and Education. Truckstops joining the organization would be exposed in advance to the possibilities and responsibilities of their role in foreseeable emergencies, including crisis relocation. Checklists would be prepared and distributed outlining these responsibilities. This advance exposure cannot help but improve that performance in time of actual emergency.

5.3 POTENTIAL COSTS AND REVENUES

Detailed estimates of the cost of an emergency organization of truckstop operators are heavily dependent on the number of member truckstops. The initial cost of researching, developing, printing, and distributing a national directory of member truckstops similar to that published by Union Oil is estimated to approach $400,000. Subsequent editions of 5,000 copies each could be printed and distributed for roughly half this amount. In addition to the cost of developing and printing a directory, other initial costs faced by such an organization would include the costs of establishing and staffing a central office, making personal contacts with truckstop owners, and printing necessary forms, releases, and organizational brochures and official placards. Even with these activities, the initial cost incurred by such an organization during the first year of its operation should not exceed $1 million.<sup>1</sup> This rough estimate should be refined in the planning stages as more details are developed concerning the size of the organization and its day-to-day operations.

The seed money required to start such an organization might come in the form of a grant or a low-interest loan from the government. The investment required to provide emergency generators could be a part of the seed money or could be handled separately. A number of options exist to provide member truckstops with emergency generator sets. New sets might be purchased and donated or loaned to member truckstops; member truckstops might be furnished with existing government surplus generators; member truckstops might purchase new generators themselves; or the organization might underwrite a loan for the truckstop to obtain and install the generator set.

Once underway, the organization would be sustained by contributions from member truckstops. These truckstops would pay a nominal fee monthly or yearly to sustain the organization, police it, repay any loans, update directories, etc.

5.4 RECOMMENDATIONS FOR IMPLEMENTATION

Several steps should be followed in order to establish the proposed emergency organization:

1. A feasibility study should be undertaken to sample interest among truckstop operators, lay out operational plans in more detail, investigate the availability of government surplus generators, provide detailed cost estimates, and develop a rudimentary cost/benefit analysis. Such a study should be undertaken with the cooperation of such organizations as NATSO and the ATA, so that the proposed organization could be made to fit the existing emergency response framework.
2. Sources of government funding should be explored and the initial steps toward obtaining this funding should be taken.

<sup>1</sup>This estimate does not include the cost of emergency generators if such equipment is to be provided by the organization.

3. Assuming sufficient interest on the part of both the U.S. government and individual truckstop operators, and positive results from the feasibility study, steps should be taken immediately to form the proposed organization. In the event that some questions exist in the minds of government or industry, a pilot project might be undertaken in a specific region to test the workability of the concept. Such a project might entail organizing local truckstops, furnishing them with emergency generators, developing a state or regional directory, signing a memorandum of understanding with the state agency responsible for emergency services, and monitoring the results.

4. Additional study should be undertaken to identify the location of truck terminals operated and maintained by private fleets, assess their potential role in times of crisis, and sample the interest of private fleet operators in the proposed emergency organization.

APPENDIX B

LISTS OF ESSENTIAL
NATIONAL AND LOCAL FACILITIES

APPENDIX B

LISTS OF ESSENTIAL NATIONAL AND LOCAL FACILITIES*

As noted in the text, several "essential" industry lists have been prepared in accordance with various criteria. There is apparent agreement among all criteria, however, that food manufacturers, fuel suppliers (where fuel is defined as energy), pharmaceutical manufacturers, and transportation operations are essential to the life support of the population and to the continued operation of the productive capacity of the United States. The major problems of identifying critical facilities lie in the area of defining which portions of the production capacity should be kept operating during a crisis relocation and are essential to post-attack recovery after a nuclear exchange, and even which are essential to maintain production in the event of a conventional war of unknown magnitude. Obviously, one master "Nationally Essential Facilities" list cannot be developed to meet these varying requirements. Therefore, it was decided to concentrate on identifying the facilities that should be kept in operation during a crisis relocation period of 14-30 days. An interim list of such facilities, arranged by Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) Code, appears on the following pages.

It should be noted that manufacturing establishments and suppliers of raw or semi-finished materials to them have been considered as nationally essential facilities. Because of the difficulty in determining the location of such facilities as:

- Petroleum bulk stations and terminals;
- Truck "redistribution" facilities;
- Railroad marshaling yards; and
- Mining and extraction processing facilities, they have not been included as candidates for inclusion in the NEF list. Many of those in the last category are located in sparsely populated areas; however, some (such as oil extraction) are located in populated areas. Future research should attempt to develop a nationwide index of such facilities. The current truckstop report represents a first step toward such an index. Additional information on the location of these facilities should be assembled as regions, states and local areas develop individual crisis relocation plans.

A major problem for inclusion of any facility of a NEFL is the total output required for the industry during the evacuation period. There is doubt that demand for goods will drop; the extent of the drop can only be guessed. For example, gasoline consumption will be cut drastically because private automobile use will be virtually nonexistent; fuel consumption will drop because some industries will be shut down; steel demand will drop for the same reason. Thus, for example, the question posed is how many of the refineries and steel mills in the evacuated areas need be kept in operation. Obviously, steel can be shipped away from the areas at hazard and stockpiled; but there is an absolute limit to fuel storage space which is rather easily reached when consumption falls by even a few percent.

Criteria, Methodology and an Explanation of the Local Vital Industries SIC Table

The definition of 'Local Vital Facilities' is those facilities in a local area where production must be maintained for the life support of the population of that city prior to, during, and for the duration of the evacuation. This definition limits the facilities to those contributing to the production items that fulfill basic human needs--ostensibly food and shelter.

Based on the four-digit SIC code industries, a table was developed marking the local vital industries (based on the above definition). The following pages outline specific criteria for inclusion and exclusion, and explain the limitations of the table. The general criteria (outlined by the above definition), the criteria for the inclusion of specific industries on the local vital industries SIC list, and the choice of specific plants on the local vital facilities lists were determined judgmentally by the author, as a result of discussions with DCPA staff officers, IDA and JHK & Associates staff members, local and state authorities, and city planners of Austin and San Antonio, Texas, and a brief process analysis of certain industries.

Criteria for Inclusion in the Local Vital Industries SIC List

The following explanations outline entire sectors included in the High-Risk Area and special cases where inclusion might seem questionable. It is assumed that all facilities in the Host Jurisdiction will continue to operate, subject to availability of inventory:

- (1) All industrial sectors that input to the production of food are included. There are, nevertheless, exceptions to this rule--notably production of foods with little nutritional value (e.g., candy and carbonated soft drinks). More often, only a few products of an SIC group are included, while a great number of products under the same SIC group are excluded. An example of this is SIC 2099: Food Preparations, NEC. Yeast, which is a local vital product, comes under this SIC; therefore, the group number is included, although other products that also come under this group (e.g., spices, catsup, and chutney) are not vital products. Thus, in the San Antonio sample lists, not all plants with the SIC number 2099 have been included, although the number is on the Local Vital Industries SIC list.
- (2) All energy-producing industries (electric companies, petroleum refineries) are included in the Local Vital Industries SIC and facilities lists. These will also show on the National Essential Facilities lists.
- (3) Wholesale trade facilities and companies are included where they pertain to the distribution of food, drugs, and other vital items.
- (4) All facilities that produce pastries are included, on the assumption that they are easily converted to bread production.
- (5) Industries producing beer are included, on the assumption that they provide a good source of drinking water which could be bottled during a crisis.
- (6) All transportation SIC groups are included, although regular routes and business-as-usual would be different.
- (7) Retail stores are indicated as being operable in Host Jurisdictions only. Even though the probability exists that all such establishments will continue to operate in these low-risk areas until their stocks are depleted, these specific SIC establishments are highlighted to ensure that the local authorities will arrange for necessary controls and replenishments of their essential life-support goods.

APPENDIX C

SAMPLE MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

UNDERSTANDING

AND

KING COUNTY OFFICE OF EMERGENCY SERVICES

1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this understanding between the Seattle Chapter, National Defense Transportation Association (SC/NDTA) and the King County Office of Emergency Services is to provide guidance for the implementation of the National Understanding of September 26, 1973, between the Chairman of the Board and the National President NDTA, and the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency and to establish policy for the development of procedures to identify, obtain and coordinate the management of all transportation personnel and resources for local transportation support during peacetime and wartime disasters.

2. KING COUNTY OFFICE OF EMERGENCY SERVICES

a. Emergency functions and responsibilities for King County, Washington are set forth in the King County Emergency Operations Plan, June 1975. The King County Office of Emergency Services, by Charter decree, has become part of the Division of Emergency Services, Department of Public Safety, King County. The Manager of the Office of Emergency Services is directly responsible to the Commander of the Division of Emergency Services.

b. In the performance of his functions, the Manager of the Office of Emergency Services works with agencies of City and County Government, Federal and State officials, industry and private organizations. He is responsible for the formulation, development, execution and administration of a disaster management program for King County which will minimize the effects upon the population and property of King County caused or which would be caused by an emergency or disaster of any kind and which will provide the actions and measures designed to deal with the immediate emergency conditions created by such emergency or disaster and coordinate the activities to effectuate emergency repair to, or the emergency restoration of vital utilities and facilities destroyed or damaged by such emergency or disaster.

3. SEATTLE CHAPTER, NATIONAL DEFENSE TRANSPORTATION ASSOCIATION

a. The Seattle Chapter, NDTA, a member Chapter of the National Defense Transportation Association has a membership of over 200 and is completely autonomous within the framework of the National Constitution and Bylaws.

b. The aims and objectives of the Seattle Chapter, NDTA, are to pursue and carry out within the community of King County those aims and objectives of the Association outlined in the National Understanding of September 26, 1973.

4. POLICIES

In order that transportation resources within King County may be coordinated and utilized to the fullest advantage in rendering assistance to local government in time of emergency or disaster, the King County Office of Emergency Services and the Seattle Chapter, National Defense Transportation affirm the following policies:

a. The responsibility for emergency services in King County is vested in the County Executive.

b. The Office of Emergency Services, King County, is the agency primarily responsible for plans and programs for the protection and survival of the population of King County during emergencies or disasters.

c. The Seattle Chapter, NDTA, through its Board of Directors and Emergency Committees, will maintain close and continuous liaison with the King County Office of Emergency Services.

d. The Seattle Chapter, NDTA, will arrange and coordinate transportation in emergency support to local government from local transportation and related industries.

e. In an emergency or disaster or in preparation therefor, the Manager, King County Office of Emergency Services, will when necessary request assistance from local transportation and related industries through the Seattle Chapter, NDTA. The assistance requested may include, but is not limited to:

(1) Provision of inventory data on transportation resources.

(2) Surveys and damage assessment.

(3) Transportation of essential supplies and equipment from depots, warehouses, stores, or other locations, to welfare centers or fallout shelters.

(4) Transportation of emergency personnel.

(5) Emergency movement of people and material.

f. The Seattle Chapter, NDTA, will participate in tests, training and exercises when requested by the Manager, King County Office of Emergency Services.

5. TRANSPORTATION REQUESTS AND FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

a. Compensation for all transportation personnel, equipment and facilities provided to local government for survival operations support during emergencies or disasters in accordance with this understanding will be accomplished through the Office of Emergency Services emergency procurement and reimbursement procedures.

b. During periods of survival operations, normal procedures for ordering and billing may not be feasible. A trip ticket and/or receipting arrangement will be developed to provide a basis for obtaining and determining compensation for transportation services voluntarily made available. The details of such arrangements will become part of this letter of understanding. Through the use of these trip tickets in an emergency period, local officials will be authorized to utilize transportation services. The trip ticket procedure will provide the basis for reimbursement by King County Office of Emergency Services for transportation services.

6. SUPERSESSION

The Understanding between the Seattle Chapter, National Defense Transportation Association and Seattle-King County Civil Defense, regarding NDTA support to local government during Civil Defense Emergencies dated May 19, 1970 is superseded hereby.
