NATIONAL CLAIMS TO MARITIME JURISDICTIONS

INTRODUCTION

The following list of national claims to maritime jurisdictions has been compiled and collated from the latest available official sources. The document is intended to be a research and reference tool and it does not necessarily constitute an official acceptance or recognition by the United States Government of the claims or of the specific principles or practices involved therein. While every effort has been made to insure the accuracy and reliability of the list, there may be mistakes and the user is requested to note any errors of omission or commission. Corrections should be forwarded to the Office of the Geographer, Department of State, Washington, D. C. 20520.

As a cautionary note, the sections concerned with a) bilateral and multilateral fishing agreements and b) maritime pollution legislation and agreements are considered to be of a lower degree of accuracy and completeness than the other portions of the study.

As new data become available, correction sheets for the individual countries will be issued. Original recipients of the National Claims to Maritime Jurisdictions should receive these change sheets automatically. Inquiries on their status may be made to the address listed in the paragraph above.

In the tables, the European states, which are parties to the European Fisheries Convention and/or the European Economic Community, are noted. The European Fisheries Convention (1964), which is limited in its effect to parties to the Convention, permits the states to fix a maximum exclusive fisheries limit of six nautical miles from the national baseline. An additional contiguous zone, which in combination with the exclusive fisheries zone, may not exceed 12 nautical miles from the national baseline, is also authorized. It should be noted, however, that the authorization has been enacted only by the United Kingdom at this time.

The common fisheries policy of the European Economic Community (October 20, 1970) permits member countries to fish in the maritime waters subject to other EEC countries. Negotiations between the EEC and the newly applying states of the United Kingdom, Ireland and Norway may modify the policy, in a transitory manner, to protect the interests of local populations heavily dependent on coastal fisheries.

Several points should be noted in relation to the tables themselves. All countries are listed alphabetically by their short-form names, if any. Thus the Arab Republic of Egypt will be listed under Egypt and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under the Soviet Union. Please note that Congo (Kinshasa) is now known as Zaïre. The type of claim to maritime jurisdiction is listed in the left-hand column. No effort has been made to arrange these types of jurisdiction by degree of importance; rather they are grouped only for the sake of convenience. The date column contains only the year of the enactment or of the legislation concerned. All claims to the territorial sea and to other special zones of competence are in nautical miles unless otherwise noted. In contrast, claims to the continental shelf are in meters (of water depth) unless otherwise specified. Where no specific claim is given for the shelf but the state is a party to the Convention on the Continental Shelf, the definition of the Convention contained in Article 1 is deemed to be in effect.

The user should also note that no effort has been made to provide completeness in the past claims. Where data have been available, they have been provided. In several instances, the last claim listed is not necessarily the current or the sole claim. Wherever possible, the meaning of terms such as "territorial sea", "exclusive fishing zone", "continental shelf", etc., is that which is recognized under the general principles of international law. However, there exists a considerable latitude among the individual enactments of states throughout the world. Therefore, the reader is encouraged to consult the original source for the precise meaning of the terms where doubt may exist or extreme precision is desired.

The Notes column contains references to specific sources and supplementary data which are of importance but which do not easily fit under other headings.

CONTINENTAL SHELF	1968	Edict of the Supreme Soviet of Feb. 6, 1968	200 meters and exploitability	Party to the Continental Shelf Convention (Nov. 22, 1960) The U.S.S.R./Norway Agreement of 15 February 1957, concerning the sea frontier between the two countries, defines the U.S.S.R./Norwegian sea frontier in the Varanger fjord as a straight line from an agreed frontier mark to the intersection of the outer limits of U.S.S.R. and Norwegian territorial seas. Neither of the parties is to extend its territorial sea beyond the straight line extending from the said intersection to the median point of the line between Cape Nemetsky and Cape Kiberqnes. The Finland/U.S.S.R. Agreement of 20 May 1965, Regarding the Boundaries of Sea Waters and the Continental Shelf in the Gulf of Finland, refers to the 1958 Geneva Convention on the Continental Shelf and establishes along agreed points a sea boundary line between the contracting parties, as well as the boundary lines of their territorial sea in the Gulf of Finland in the northeast section of Sursari (Gogland) Island. The Finland/U.S.S.R. Agreement on the Continental Shelf Boundary in the Baltic Sea of 5 May 1967 provides for the delimitation on the median line principle of the continental shelf between both countries in a specific area of the northeastern Baltic Sea. See Limits in the Seas, Nos. 16 and 17.

* In a letter of 11 October 1967 addressed to FAO, the Ministry of Overseas Development stated that the United Kingdom Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878, and the Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895, which provide for a 3-mile territorial sea limit, extended to dependent territories that were colonies. There was no act which specified generally the extent of territorial waters, fishery limits, or continental shelves of Dominions. Some dependent territories had special legislation relating to fishery limits and the continental shelf (viz. Bahamas, Cayman Islands, Turks and Caicos Islands, Falkland Islands, Virgin Islands, Seychelles, Gilbert and Ellis Islands, and Fiji). The United Kingdom's ratification of the four 1958 Conventions on the Law of the Sea extended to dependent territories other than the Persian Gulf Protected States.

CONTINENTAL SHELF	1945	Truman Proclamation		Party to the Continental Shelf Convention (Apr. 12, 1961) The Mexico/United States Fisheries Agreement of 27 October 1967 provides for reciprocal rights for United States and Mexican fishermen off each other's coasts in the 9- to 12-mile area for 5 years beginning 1 January 1968. Conditions designating the species and catch limits, collabora- tion in the exchange of data and research and conservation are also provided for. The Japan/United States Fisheries Agreement of 9 May 1967 provides that Japanese nationals and fishing vessels shall not engage in fishing in the exclusive fishing zone of the United States except for crab and tuna in specified areas. Dredge and long- line fishing is also permitted in specified areas and on specified date and loading operations are restricted to certain areas. The agreement, effective from 9 May 1967 to 31 December 1968, and in some cases to 31 May 1969, was modified by a further agreement of 23 December 1968 and extended until 31 December 1970. The United States/U.S.S.R. Agreement on Certain Fishery Problems in the Northeastern Part of the Pacific Ocean off the Coast of the United States of 13 February 1967 established specially designated areas of the high seas off the coast of the United States in which nationals and vessels of the U.S.S.R. are not to engage in fishing. In return, vessels and nationals of the U.S.S.R. were authorized to fish in specifically designated areas within the United States exclusive fishing zone. This agreement was modified and extended by an agreement of 31 January 1969 for a period of two years.

FISHERIES CONSERVATION	1945	Truman Proclamation		Power to set up explicitly bounded conservation zones in areas where fisheries are developed and maintained by US nationals alone. The Japan/United King Crab Agreement of 25 November 1964, extended for a further two years on 29 November 1966, granted to Japanese nationals and fishing vessels the right to continue to engage in the king crab fishery in the eastern Bering Sea for the period ending 17 November 1968 in the waters which have been fished historically by Japan. This agreement was modified by a further agreement of 23 December 1968 and extended until 31 December 1970. The right to fish is subject to conditions relating to catch limits. Both governments reserve their positions with regard to the question of whether the king crab is a high sea fishing resource (the Japanese view) or is a natural resource of the continental shelf (the United States view). The United States/U.S.S.R. King Crab Agreement of 5 February 1965, extended for a further two years on 13 February 1967, recognizes that the king crab is a resource of the continental shelf. It provides that nationals and fishing vessels of the U.S.S.R. may engage in the king crab fishery in a specified area of the Bering Sea for the period ending on 5 February 1969, subject to conditions relating to catch limits. This agreement was modified and further extended by an agreement of 31 January 1969 for an additional two years.
