PREFACE

This note documents a study conducted under Task Orders 79-V-1 and 80-V-1 as part of the Rand Manpower, Mobilization, and Readiness Program, sponsored by the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Manpower, Reserve Affairs and Logistics)-- OASD(MRA&L).

With manpower issues assuming an ever greater importance in defense planning and budgeting, the Rand study program seeks to develop broad strategies and specific solutions for dealing with present and future defense manpower problems. The achievement of these goals requires the development of new methodologies for examining broad classes of manpower problems, as well as specific problem-oriented research. In addition to analyzing current and future manpower issues, this study program seeks to contribute to a better general understanding of the manpower problems confronting the Department of Defense.

The 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service is one of several interrelated collection efforts of the Rand-DoD Survey Group, a component of the Rand Manpower, Mobilization, and Readiness Program. The survey group has designed and administered two other military life cycle surveys: the 1978 DoD Survey of Officers and Enlisted Personnel, which focused on the in-Service population, i.e. the men and women on active duty in the four Services,* and the 1979 Reserve Force Surveys, which dealt with enlisted personnel and officers in the Army Reserve and Army National Guard. Future surveys may include other military populations, e.g., reservists in the Navy or Air Force, and other junctures in the military life cycle, e.g., separation decision.

The 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service was administered to enlistees at the Armed Forces Entrance Examination Stations (AFEES) immediately after the enlistees were sworn in. Because of the large number of questions asked, and to account for certain possible differences among enlistees, the survey was administered in two phases, Wave 1 and Wave 2. This note provides the documentation for data collected in the 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service: Wave 2.* The basic reference document for users of the data, the note contains substantive and technical information about the survey and the data files required for planning tabulations and other analyses.

*Wave 1 was described in Zahava D. Doering, David W. Grissmer, Jane. S. Morse, 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service Wave 1 User's Manual and Codebook, N-1605-MRAL, November 1980.

This note provides documentation for data collected in the 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service: Wave 2, one of several interrelated data collection efforts of the Rand-DoD Survey Group, a component of Rand's Manpower, Mobilization and Readiness Program. The survey group's objectives include the systematic examination of, and provision of policy-sensitive information about, the military life cycle. The military life cycle includes both reserve and active force enlistment decisions, experiences, career orientations, responses to policies that affect military members and their households, and decisions to leave the military.

The 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service was administered to enlistees at the Armed Forces Entrance Examination Stations (AFEES) immediately after they were sworn in. The purpose of the survey, referred to as the 1979 AFEES Survey, was to provide the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) and the military Services with data that can be used in policy formulation and research, especially in the areas of accession and first-term attrition of Active Force enlisted personnel. It is the only survey administered to personnel in all four Services at an identical point in their military career, i.e. immediately on enlistment.

The survey was designed to be administered in two questionnaire variants, one focused primarily on the enlistment process, the other on identifying possible predictors of attrition. Both variants contain a common set of items designed to collect background information about the individual. In addition, to study possible differences between individuals who enlist at different times of the year, the survey was administered in two phases, 6 calendar months apart. The first phase of the survey, Wave 1 (Forms 1 and 2), was administered in March-April 1979; the second phase, wave 2 (Forms 3 and 4), was administered in September-October 1979. Data collection took place at all 67 AFEES stations.

SAMPLE DESIGN AND RESPONSE RATES

Most of the information collected in the 1979 AFEES Survey relates to the enlistment decision process and to the characteristics and experiences of the individual prior to enlistment. To take maximum advantage of the enlistees' recall of information, the questionnaires were administered as close to the enlistment decision point as possible and before they had military experience. These considerations, combined with a legal requirement prohibiting survey of individuals until after they have been sworn into the Armed Forces, led to a design that limited respondents to men and women without any prior military service who were Active Force accessions and who would be interviewed as soon as possible after the the enlistment decision point. In practical terms, this meant interviewing individuals who were going into the Delayed Entry Program (DEP) or who were being processed and sent directly to training.

To simplify administration and provide sufficient cases for analyses of various subgroups, e.g., Service, region, recruiting district, and educational group, the design called for interviewing 100 percent of the survey-eligible respondents during two designated 20-day periods. We estimated that 18,000 to 25,000 survey-eligible individuals would be processed during each of the 20-day periods. Since we planned to administer two somewhat different questionnaires simultaneously, the expected samples for each questionnaire were simply 50 percent of the survey-eligibles at each AFEES during the 20 days. The Wave 2 survey was actually conducted in the period between 4 September and 6 November 1979, depending on the AFEES station, and a total of 15,219 questionnaires were returned.

The instructions for sample selection were straightforward. Rand monitored the survey administration through periodic telephone calls to the AFEES. Preliminary indications suggest, nevertheless, that some AFEES did not always follow the instructions for collecting data and identifying respondents.

To verify the sample composition, the sampling criteria were applied to the U.S. Army Recruiting Command (USAREC) accession records for all individuals processed between September and November. A post hoc sample was then selected by using the actual survey administration dates for each AFEES. This sample of 27,831 individuals should include the accession record of each individual who completed a questionnaire as well as of each who was survey-eligible but did not return a questionnaire.

Using information in the questionnaires, we tried to link the 15,880 questionnaires with the USAREC records. The linkage identified 307 questionnaires that were completed by ineligible individuals, and these were removed from the files. The response rate was 56 percent. If current analysis reveals no substantial differences between the characteristics of those who returned surveys and those who did not, the data can be used without weights or additional adjustments. If a bias is found, corrective measures will have to be taken.

CONTENTS OF THE DATA FILES

The 1979 AFEES Survey is composed of four questionnaires: Forms 1 and 2 administered in Wave 1 (spring), and Forms 3 and 4, administered in Wave 2 (fall). The questionnaire development process for the survey was guided by two major considerations: (1) relevance of the items to important policy issues relating to accession and first-term attrition and (2) accommodation of the research needs of as large a group of potential users as possible.

It became apparent in designing Wave 1 pretest questionnaires that even a minimum set of analytic requirements could not be met in one questionnaire. Such a questionnaire would have required well over an hour of each respondent's time. To decrease respondent burden, two questionnaires were designed, with many of the items included in both. In addition to the common set, items designed to collect detailed information about the enlistment process were clustered in Form 1. A group of items identified as possible predictors of attrition, together with items asked specifically of female enlistees, were clustered in Form 2. The wave 2 questionnaires continued this broad substantive distinction between the two forms: Form 3, like Form 1, emphasized enlistment; Form 4, like Form 2, emphasized attrition and issues related to women.

DATA PROCESSING AND DATA LIMITATIONS

The questionnaires designed for this survey were self-administered forms suitable for subsequent processing by optical scanning. Most of the questions were followed by a set of preprinted responses. To answer the questions, the respondent was required to darken the "bubble" next to the response that best indicated his answer. Other items required the respondent to enter a multidigit number in a set of boxes by darkening bubbles to correspond to each digit. The optical scanner reads every mark the respondent makes in the prescribed places on the forms. The data files described in this note represent the data after they have been transformed from the exact responses read by an optical scanner to usable responses.

The optical scanning contractor, the Intran Corporation, was given detailed specifications for code assignment, handling of incomplete or illegible data, file formats, etc. Every attempt was made to ensure that the information on the tape would reflect all of the information provided by the respondent on the questionnaire, even where the respondent gave incomplete or extra data. Decision rules were provided for scanning responses to questionnaire items in which the respondent marked more than one answer but for which only one answer was required. Codes assigned to the optical scanning bubbles were chosen to be consistent with some of the major statistical packages currently being used by analysts. Finally, to the extent feasible, codes were selected to be consistent across items.

Intran returned the files containing the initial coding (scanning) to the Defense Manpower Data Center (DMDC). DMDC systematically processed the data files so that every response field of the survey record for every respondent contained either a well-defined response code or an audit code.

In the recoding, special attention was paid to grid responses that were either erroneously left-justified or that contained blanks. The raw marginal distributions for gridded items indicated that machine algorithms could not easily be developed for adjusting the data without extensive review of the errors; all such responses were assigned a special audit code. Furthermore, upper and lower boundaries were also established and audit codes assigned to grid responses outside a plausible range.

The assumptions made about the handling of data in grids and extra data are as follows:

1. Incomplete grid entries do not appear on these files, i.e. they have been assigned audit codes. We assumed that data reconstruction, if possible, would not change the basic distributions of these continuous variables.
2. Ranges have been defined for continuous variables, i.e. responses in grids. The ranges for each variable are defined in Sections V and VI. A conservative approach was used in defining ranges; the range selected is slightly broader than the available information, and preliminary analysis indicates that it should be.
3. Multiple entries have been resolved in variables for which a definite criterion for selection could be established. Data resulting from such a resolution are identified by special flags, enabling analysts to eliminate information coded through this method.
4. Extra data resulting from skip pattern errors have been retained on the files. Possibly extraneous data provided by the respondent were not edited out by assigning them a "not applicable" code. The "not applicable" code was assigned only when the respondent left an item blank on the basis of an instruction.

The two last sections of the note reproduce the questions from Forms 3 and 4, together with all of the technical information required for using the data. Definitions of all the codes are included, as well as notes to aid in item interpretation.

This note reflects the work and dedication of many individuals. We welcome the opportunity to acknowledge them here.

The director and staff members of the Accession and Retention Directorate, OASD(MRA&L)-Military Personnel Policy, provided much needed substantive guidance and administrative support for the conduct of this survey. A. J. Martin, the director, together with Fred Suffa and Eli Flyer, shared their many years of experience working with entrants into the military with us. James Ginter of Ohio State University, a consultant to the Directorate, provided information and ideas related to military advertising. Col. John Aldrich was our liaison with the Armed Forces Entrance Examination Stations (AFEES) for data collection.

Members of the Joint Market Analysis and Research Committee (JMARC) reviewed questionnaire drafts and offered many valuable suggestions. We would especially like to thank Ron Liveris. Special note should be made of the AFEES commanders who cooperated in the conduct of questionnaire pretests, arranged for informal discussions with enlistees, and were responsible for the actual data collection.

Several members of the Defense Manpower Data Center (DMDC) should be singled out. Kenneth C. Scheflen, chief, DMDC, solved many of the organizational and logistical problems of conducting the research. Zietta Ferris supervised all of the activities connected with the receipt and editing of questionnaires, ably assisted by Kathi Dozier, Mary T. Willis, and Geni Kabiu. Elsie Elster provided keypunching support for both the questionnaire pretest and subsequent document control activities. Helen Hagan was responsible for all aspects of file manipulation and sample verification and wrote and implemented all of the software. In addition, her sound substantive and technical suggestions, combined with patience and humor, greatly simplified and improved the work. She was assisted in some phases of the processing by Owen O'Neill, Jim Blackledge, and Ian Nelson.

We would like to mention the work of Dennis Dillor of the Intran Corporation, the optical scanning contractor responsible for the initial processing.

Our colleagues at The Rand Corporation shared their insights and experience with us in the development of the questionnaires and overall design of the survey. We would especially like to acknowledge the efforts of Cheryl Cook and Sue Berryman, whose work in issues related to women's role in the military played a major role in the questionnaire design. In the development of the questionnaires and administrative procedures, we relied heavily on and greatly profited from Jennifer Hawes's broad range of survey research experience. Deborah Hensler, William P. Hutzler, Robert L. Roll, and Jane Sachar provided helpful comments and suggestions in both the design phases of the survey and in reviewing the present document. Robert Crain's review of the final version of this note was especially useful.

As we began work on this document, we depended on the technical expertise and experience of Rand colleagues. Maureen David and Marie Sanchez were responsible for converting the optical scanning questionnaires into the printed forms in Section V and Section VI and for typing this note. The entering of code definitions, notes, and other technical information into the codebook was the responsibility of Sally Rich, who also cross-referenced the questionnaires and resolved a host of technical problems. The production of the codebook section was completed under the supervision of Diane Reingold in Rand's Survey Production Unit. Special note should be made of Debby Wesley, who carried much of the responsibility for producing Sections V and VI.

The authors are solely responsible for any errors or omissions that may remain.

I. INTRODUCTION

The 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service is one of several interrelated data collection efforts of the Rand-DoD Survey Group, a component of the Rand Manpower, Mobilization, and Readiness Program. The survey group's objectives include the systematic examination of, and provision of policy-sensitive information about, the military life cycle. The military life cycle includes both reserve and active force enlistment decisions, experiences, career orientations, responses to policies that affect military members and their households, and decisions to leave the military.

The survey group has to date, designed and administered three military life cycle surveys:

- o The 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service, administered to enlistees at the Armed Forces Entrance Examination Stations (AFEES) immediately after the enlistees were sworn in
- o The 1978 DoD Survey of Officers and Enlisted Personnel, which focused on the in-Service population, i.e. the men and women on active duty in the four Services
- o The 1979 Reserve Force Surveys, administered to enlisted personnel and officers in the Army Reserve and Army National Guard.

Future surveys may include other military populations, e.g., reservists in the Navy or Air Force, as well as other junctures in the military life cycle, e.g., separation decision.

The purpose of the 1979 DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service, referred to as the 1979 AFEES Survey, is to provide the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) and the military Services with data that can be used in policy formulation and research, especially in the areas of accession and first-term attrition of Active Force enlisted personnel. It is the only survey administered to personnel in all four Services at an identical point in their military career, i.e. immediately on enlistment. At the present time, it is the only vehicle for collecting detailed information about the characteristics of the men and women who enlist in the military and for providing extensive information about the events and motivations related to their enlistment.

Because the survey serves several purposes and asks a large number of questions, we decided to administer it in two questionnaire variants. In addition, to study possible differences among individuals who enlist at different times of the year, we administered the two survey questionnaires in two phases, 6 calendar months apart. The first phase of the survey, Wave 1 (Forms 1 and 2), was administered in March-April 1979; the second phase, Wave 2 (Forms 3 and 4), was administered in September-October 1979. Data collection took place at all 67 AFEES.

The data collected in this survey are documented in two Rand notes, each dealing with one wave of the data collection. This is the second note; the first note, N-1605-MRAL (November 1980), by the same authors, describes Wave 1. A third note will describe the samples, compare the survey samples to the population from which they were selected, and analyze the response rates. It will also compare the characteristics of respondents who completed questionnaires to the characteristics of the military population eligible for the survey.

This note is the user's manual and codebook for the two Wave 2 questionnaires (Forms 3 and 4). It summarizes the sample design and selection procedures, provides preliminary information about response rates and general information about the survey questionnaires and their processing, and describes the data in detail. As the basic reference for all users of the data, this note contains information with which to interpret coded responses to each question and helps users plan tabulations or other kinds of analyses. In addition, it provides technical information about the structure of the data files, number of records, general format, etc.

Section II of this note summarizes the sample design and selection procedures and currently available information about response rates. Section III discusses the substantive contents of Forms 3 and 4.

Section IV describes the operations performed on the data between the time the questionnaires were returned from the field and the existence of the actual data files. The discussion of data recoding, editing, and the assignment of audit codes to response fields is significant in that some of the assumptions made in this process have analytic implications. The section also explains the quality checks performed on the data and gives technical information about the structure of the data files, number of records, general format, etc.

Section V reproduces the questions from the Form 3 survey instrument and provides all of the technical information required for using the data. Definitions of all the codes are included, as are notes to aid in item interpretation. Section VI presents the same information for the Form 4 questionnaire.

The appendixes contain ancillary reference material to facilitate the understanding of the sample and the questionnaires. Appendix A lists the 67 AFEES, all of which participated in the survey, the dates on which data were collected, and the number of individuals who returned questionnaires. Appendix B lists each item in Form 3 in the same order as in the questionnaire reproduced in Section V, and, for each item, the number of the corresponding question on Forms 1, 2, and 4. This listing enables the user to find identical variables in other variants. Appendix C is an ordered listing of Form 4, with references to Forms 1, 2 and 3.

II. SAMPLE DESIGN AND RESPONSE RATES

SAMPLE DESIGN

The sample design of the 1979 AFEES Survey was based on similar approaches to earlier surveys conducted at the AFEES stations. In the past, stations had sometimes been assigned a quota of questionnaires to be administered, either a definite number or a number based on the number of individuals processed in a given period, and the selection of individuals had been left to the discretion of the survey administrators. Alternatively, AFEES stations had been asked to survey all of the individuals processed during a given time period. In general, the type of individual to be surveyed, e.g., males or females, or individuals with or without prior Service had also been defined.

Most of the information collected in the 1979 AFEES Survey relates to the enlistment decision process and to the characteristics and experiences of the individual prior to enlistment (discussed in detail in Section III). To study the enlistment process completely, we would need a longitudinal survey design that would follow individuals from the time they made the initial gesture toward the Armed Forces, through all phases of recruiter contact, to the swearing-in ceremony. Data collected at the point at which the decision is clearest in the enlistee's mind, i.e. at the AFEES, may be used as a surrogate method of collecting some of the data needed to understand the process. In addition, the individual's recall of such experiences and events as employment history, contact with educational institutions, and the recruitment process is probably also at a maximum just prior to actual Service entry.

These considerations, combined with a regulation prohibiting surveys of individuals until after they have been sworn into the Armed Forces, led us to a design that limited respondents to men and women without any prior military Service who were active force accessions and who would be interviewed as soon as possible after the enlistment decision had been made. In practical terms, this meant interviewing individuals who were going into the Delayed Entry Program (DEP) or who were being processed and sent directly to training without time in DEP, i.e., "direct ships."

The initial sample design called for administration of the questionnaire at a subgroup of AFEES in March and at another subgroup in September; the larger stations were to have been included in both samples. However, as we examined station characteristics and accession flows, it became clear that such subsamples would be difficult to select. The data with which to select a better sample, e.g., economic distribution of the eligible pool in each AFEES jurisdiction, was not available. Furthermore, such a sample design would not have allowed for the allocation of respondents to recruiting areas, a feature requested by the Joint Market Analysis and Research Committee (JMARC) and previously implemented in 1976. As a result, the survey was administered at all 67 stations, both in spring and fall.

To simplify administration and provide sufficient cases for analyses of various subgroups, e.g., Service, region, recruiting district, and educational group, the final design called for interviewing 100 percent of the survey-eligible respondents during a designated 20-day period. The size of the expected sample was estimated on the basis of Military Enlistment Processing Command (MEPCOM) files for March-April and September-October 1978. We assumed no major changes in the accession patterns of a particular time of the year from 1978 to 1979 and estimated that 18,000 to 25,000 survey-eligible individuals would be processed during each 20-day period. Since we planned to administer two somewhat different questionnaires simultaneously, the expected samples for each questionnaire were simply 50 percent of the survey-eligibles at each AFEES during the 20 days.

The calendar time for the survey administration was selected on the basis of several criteria. First, both conventional wisdom and statistics describing enlistees suggested that their backgrounds and the reasons for enlistment differed between spring and fall. Second, the spring data collection would coincide with several civilian studies of the youth population. Thus, statistical comparisons between the enlistee population and individuals not entering military Service could be made.

Any sample design for a survey conducted at the AFEES is, of course, constrained in several ways. First, the number and type of individual who will be processed in a given period is not known. Second, the actual administration and sample selection is often the responsibility of individuals who do not understand the purpose of the study and are not sensitive to the need for accuracy in sample selection and record keeping. Finally, operational requirements of the AFEES often create conditions that are less than optimal for data collection. For these reasons, a sample that is well defined and easy to select is preferable to more sophisticated designs.

SAMPLE SELECTION PROCEDURES

The survey period was defined as 20 consecutive working days following the receipt of survey materials. The period was to include Saturdays if the AFEES was in operation. As can be seen from Table A, Appendix A, the survey was conducted between September and November, depending on the AFEES station.

Survey administrators were instructed to use the signed enlistment contracts to identify survey-eligible enlistees. As indicated above, an enlistee was survey-eligible if he or she:

- o Had no prior military Service (NPS)
- o Was joining the active force (Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps)
- o Was entering the Delayed Entry Program or
- o Was entering active duty on the day of the survey and had not been in a DEP.

The eligibility rules were defined in the administrative instructions. To check survey eligibility, Question 2 of each questionnaire asked:

2. Is this sentence TRUE or NOT TRUE for you?

Today is the FIRST TIME I have ever been sworn into the military.

o TRUE for me (Go to Q.3)

o NOT TRUE for me (SEE SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS BELOW)

SPECIAL INSTRUCTIONS: IF YOU HAVE EVER BEEN SWORN INTO THE MILITARY BEFORE TODAY, PLEASE TELL THE SURVEY ADMINISTRATOR NOW. DO NOT CONTINUE THE SURVEY.

If a survey participant notified the survey administrator that he or she had been sworn in before the day of the survey, the enlistment contract was to be checked. If an enlistee was found ineligible to participate, he or she was not to have completed the questionnaire.

RESPONSE RATES

The instructions for sample selection were straightforward, and the cooperation of each AFEES in survey administration was encouraged both by the United States Army Recruiting Command (USAREC) and the Services. Rand monitored the survey administration through periodic telephone calls to the AFEES. Preliminary indications suggest, nevertheless, that some AFEES did not always follow instructions for collecting data and identifying respondents.

As part of verifying the sample composition, the sampling criteria defined above were applied to the USAREC accession files containing records for all individuals processed between September and June. A post hoc sample was then selected by using the actual survey administration dates shown for each AFEES in Table A. This sample of 27,831 individuals should include the accession record of each individual who completed a questionnaire, as well as of each who was survey-eligible but who did not return a questionnaire.

Using information in the questionnaires--primarily Service, SSN, AFEES code, and birthdate--we tried to link the 15,880 questionnaires from the fall administration to the USAREC records. This linkage revealed a total of 307 survey records completed either by individuals who were definitely entering the Marine Corps Reserve (n = 61), the Army Reserve (n = 230) or those with prior military Service (n = 16). These records were removed, leaving a total of 15,573 records in the files.

The files currently contain 121 records in which the respondent indicates that he or she had been sworn into the military prior to the survey day, but for which the USAREC record has not been identified. These individuals may, in fact, not be survey-eligible.

The size of the post hoc sample selected, 27,831 individuals, suggests that the response rate for the survey may be smaller than expected. Without adjustment for the AFEES that administered the survey for less than 20 days, the response rate is 56 percent. An analysis of survey bias is being undertaken to determine if substantial differences exist between the characteristics of those who returned surveys and the population eligible for the survey. If we find that definite bias does exist, adjustments in the form of weights will have to be developed.

III. CONTENTS OF THE DATA FILES

DATA REQUIREMENTS

The 1979 AFEES Survey, as indicated above, is composed of four questionnaires: Forms 1 and 2 administered in Wave 1 (spring), and Forms 3 and 4 administered in Wave 2 (fall.) The questionnaire development process for the survey was guided by two major considerations: (1) relevance of the items to important policy issues relating to accession and first-term attrition and (2) accommodation of the research needs of as large a group of potential users as possible.

The precise structure and contents of the questionnaires resulted from several interrelated activities. Suggestions and recommendations for content were solicited from all of the offices in MRA&L, the Services, and JMARC. Rand researchers working on issues of military manpower supply, accession policy, and the use of women also defined data requirements.

In addition, an extensive review of past AFEES Survey questionnaires and reports published from the resultant data was undertaken. The purpose of the review was to determine if any continuity of subject areas and items existed across questionnaires and if any of the analysis used data that were collected in a similar manner at different times. The review concluded that significant differences in questionnaire structures, modes of administration, and samples existed between each of the previous AFEES surveys. Strict continuity, therefore, was not an issue in designing the new survey. It became clear, however, that variables should be selected and items designed so that the data collection would allow for comparisons with existing civilian data bases. Specifically, comparisons should be possible with the U.S. Bureau of the Census Current Population Survey and the Department of Labor National Longitudinal Survey of Youth.

It became apparent in the process of designing Wave 1 pretest questionnaires that even a minimal set of analytic requirements could not be met in one questionnaire. Such a questionnaire would have required well over an hour of each respondent's time. To decrease respondent burden, two questionnaires were designed, with many of the items included in both. In addition to the common set, items designed to collect detailed information about the enlistment process were clustered in Form 1. A group of items identified as possible predictors of attrition, together with items asked specifically of female recruits, were clustered in Form 2. The Wave 2 questionnaires continued this broad substantive distinction between the two forms: Form 3, like Form 1, emphasized enlistment; Form 4, like Form 2, emphasized attrition and issues related to women. Differences between the Wave 1 and Wave 2 questionnaires resulted from a decision to broaden the data base and substitute a small number of new items in Wave 2. In addition, experience with the Wave 1 questionnaires identified some technical problems that led to modification of the questionnaires before Wave 2.

STRUCTURE OF THE QUESTIONNAIRES

The questionnaires were similarly structured. The first section, Your Enlistment, collected basic information about the enlistment contract, including Service, length of enlistment, and entry level pay, together with the individual's assessment of the reasons that he or she enlisted. The second section, Facts About You, included the detailed information about the individual, including sex, race, Social Security number, and date and place of birth. The questionnaire also sought information about the composition of the enlistee's present household and his household when he was 14 years old. The section called Your Education included past and present school attendance, attainment levels, and self-reported grades. Items were included about standard college board exams, application to post-secondary educational institutions and the results of such applications. Form 3 identified participants in the Veteran's Educational Assistance Program (VEAP); Form 4 contained special items for non-high-school graduates.

The fourth section, Marriage and Children, included both present marital and family status and future plans. Section V, Working and Jobs, collected labor force participation information since age 16, together with details about the job currently or most recently held. Additional items in Form 4 asked the reasons for leaving jobs. Both forms included a labor force activity account for the preceding year in which the respondent was asked to report activities in terms of working full time, working part time, unemployed, or looking for work for each month. Participation in government-sponsored training programs, such as CETA, was also ascertained.

The section called Your Income and Expenses was designed to assess economic maturity and experience. The enlistee was asked about income for the past 3 years, total value of savings and checking accounts, and receipt of allowances and rent payments. The respondent was asked to estimate earnings if he or she were not entering the military and to indicate a preference between military and civilian jobs at different wage rates.

Form 4 contained a special section, Your Family, designed to collect data about parents, brothers, and sisters, including experience in the military, educational attainment, occupations, family income, and welfare dependency.

The next section, Your Decision to Enlist, provided data about the decisionmaking process and the importance of various information sources within it. Special attention was paid to collecting information about the sequence of activities related to enlistment, such as the order of interaction with various recruiters and the date of initial contact. Form 3 contained an expanded enlistment-decision process section at the end of the questionnaire.

This expanded last section of Form 3 described enlistment options in each of the Services and asked the respondent to indicate preferences for programs in a Service other than the one that he or she was joining. The respondent was asked: "If only the [Service] had offered each item listed below, would you have joined the [Service] instead of the Service you joined today?"

The last section of Form 4, What's Your Opinion, included a short psychological battery, items to assess attachment to a geographical locale, and a projective assessment of satisfaction with military life. Items in the second part of the section, to be answered by women recruits, related to the choice of and preference for traditional or non-traditional jobs and the feelings of family and friends on the military job selected.

The above summary of the questionnaires follows the order of the questionnaires. Table 1 summarizes the questionnaire by substantive content area. Not every item in the four questionnaires is included in this table; however, every content area is listed. In addition to the classification of items, the table indicates which of the four questionnaires contain the items.

The most complete listing of questionnaire contents appears in the appendixes. Appendix B lists each item in Form 3 in the same order as the questionnaire and, for each item, the numbers of the corresponding question on the other three questionnaires (Forms 1, 2, and 4). Appendix C is an ordered listing of Form 4, with references to Form 1, 2, and 3.

IV. DATA PROCESSING AND DATA LIMITATIONS

The questionnaires designed for this survey were self-administered forms suitable for subsequent processing by optical scanning. Most of the questions were followed by a set of printed responses. To answer the question, the respondent was required to darken the "bubble" next to the response that best indicated his answer. This response type is known as a precoded question. Other items required the respondent to enter a multidigit number in a set of boxes by darkening bubbles to correspond to each digit. This response type is known as a grid question. The optical scanner reads every mark the respondent makes in the prescribed places on the forms, either next to precoded items or in grids. The data files described here represent the data after they have been transformed from the exact responses read by an optical scanner to usable responses. The remainder of this section describes the data transformations, alerting the user to procedures that may have implications for subsequent data processing and analytic interpretation.

QUESTIONNAIRE RECEIPT AND EDITING

The procedure followed in the receipt and editing of the questionnaires at the Defense Manpower Data Center (DMDC) will be described in detail in a subsequent document, and recommendations will be made for changes for future DoD survey efforts. The basic outline of that procedure as it affects the actual processing of questionnaires is outlined below.

DMDC received questionnaires from the AFEES in boxes containing approximately 100 questionnaires. These shipments were to have been accompanied by a report form indicating the origin, size, and contents of the shipment.

In preparing questionnaires for optical scanning, DMDC personnel separated completed questionnaires from incomplete or blank forms and marked each form with an AFEES-specific identifier. DMDC personnel also calculated the administration time of each questionnaire, based on the respondent's entry of time at the beginning and end of each questionnaire form, and entered the time on the form.

In addition to assignment of AFEES identifiers, the questionnaires were also carefully reviewed at this stage to make sure that they were scannable. This review included verifying that the questionnaires did not contain stray markings, that pencil markings were dark enough to be scanned, and that a few questionnaires which had been marked with ink or which contained torn or missing pages were identified. Inked questionnaires and other potentially unscannable questionnaires were subsequently remarked with scannable pencils.

Upon completion of editing, DMDC sent the questionnaires to the optical scanning contractor, the Intran Corporation, for the preparation of machine-readable data. To simplify processing for Intran, questionnaires were sorted by form number prior to shipping.

OPTICAL SCANNING SPECIFICATIONS

Intran was given detailed specifications for code assignment, handling of incomplete or illegible data, file formats, etc. In writing specifications for the optical-scanning contractor, several considerations were taken into account. First, every attempt was made to ensure that the information on the tape returned to DMDC would reflect all of the information provided by the respondent on the questionnaire. Thus, even in those cases where the information was incomplete, or extra data were provided, the specifications were designed to preserve data. For example, partial numeric entries were scanned instead of substituting an audit code for the whole entry.

Second, decision rules were provided for scanning responses to questionnaire items in which the respondent marked more than one answer but for which only one answer was required. Third, codes assigned to the optical-scanning bubbles were chosen to be consistent with some of the major statistical packages currently being used by analysts. Finally, to the extent feasible, codes were selected to be consistent across items; e.g., the same numeric code was assigned to all "don't know" response options.

Although a general set of specifications was developed to apply to all of the questionnaires, each questionnaire also required its own set of item-specific optical-scanning specifications. (The precise technical specifications can be obtained by writing to the Chief, Survey Branch, Defense Manpower Data Center, 300 North Washington Street, Alexandria, Virginia 22314.)

Before DMDC's processing is described, several aspects of the optical scan processing of blank data and extra data and of information in grids require further explanation.

The returned questionnaires contained many instances of items that had been left blank. In processing, a distinction was made between items that had have been left blank because the respondent had been instructed to skip them and items that had been left blank as the result of respondent error. In the former case, the optical-scanning contractor was instructed to leave a blank field on the record. In the latter case, an audit code for missing data (-1) was entered. This distinction is necessary because the optical-scanning process is set up to scan only one data field at a time; i.e. the machine is not normally programmed to check relationships between data fields and determine whether or not an item should have been skipped by a specific respondent. Leaving blank the data fields that could be part of a skip pattern simplified subsequent processing at DMDC. Software was written at DMDC to check item interrelationships and to change those blanks either to codes indicating that the item did not apply to the respondent or, if the respondent should have answered the item, to a missing value code (-1).

Extra data were of two kinds. First, a respondent may have answered an item which, in fact, he should have left blank, i.e. an item that he had been instructed to skip. Second, a respondent may have marked more than one response to an item that called for only one response. The extra data of the first kind were simply left on the tape. In the second situation, Intran was given item-specific rules either for an audit code or selection among multiple entries. An audit code was used for all items for which it was impossible to develop an algorithm for selecting from among the two or more coded answers. If a logical determination of the correct response could be made, Intran was provided with rules for resolving the multiple entry. For example, in items asking for educational attainment, respondents often marked the bubbles next to both "8th grade" and "12th grade." Examination of the layout of the educational attainment items on the optical-scanning form clarifies why this mistake could be made (see, Form 1 questions 32 and 33.) We assumed that the respondent intended to show completion of both elementary and high school, and therefore we coded a value of "12" on the data files. If the selection rule was used, a flag was set to enable the analyst to distinguish between "pure" cases of 12th grade marked by the respondent and those resulting from the resolution of a multiple entry. For each questionnaire, an extra set of variables was created and appended to the end of the file; each extra variable was associated with a questionnaire item for which additional instructions had been provided.

Information in grids also presented special problems in optical scanning. Apart from errors the respondent may have made in entering information in the boxes, several types of errors resulted in marking the matching bubbles. First, although the instructions asked the respondent to "zero-fill" and "right-justify," some respondents entered the value properly in the boxes (right-justified), but failed to zero-fill the bubbles corresponding to the response. Second, some respondents entered the value in the boxes and marked the bubbles from the left. Finally, some respondents entered the values properly in the boxes but forgot to darken some or all of the corresponding bubbles. Except for zero-filled right-justified entries, data in grids were scanned as marked by the respondent without special adjustments. Subsequent handling of these grids by DMDC is outlined in the next section.

RECODING AND AUDIT CODES

Intran returned the automated files to DMDC. The automated files contained the codes specified for each item in the questionnaire, together with the extra variables indicating that rules for resolving multiple entries had been used. These are unrecoded files, representing only the initial coding (scanning) of the data. Before any additional processing was undertaken, DMDC checked the unrecoded files as received from Intran to verify that the expected code values were present in each data field.

DMDC next systematically processed the data files so that every response field of the survey record for every respondent contained either a well-defined response code or an audit code. Since the optical- scanning process cannot distinguish between responses that have been correctly left blank by a respondent, i.e. are part of a skip pattern, and those that have been missed, i.e. left blank in error, software was developed to check each blank field on each survey record and to assign either an audit code of -1 (missing data) or to replace the blank with an appropriate value referring to a specific "not applicable" definition. For example, blank fields in the item requesting spouse's education would either be recoded with an audit value of -1 (missing) if the programmed algorithm checked marital status and found the respondent married, indicating that the question should have been answered, or a value of -3 (not applicable) if the algorithm found that the respondent was single, indicating that the item was appropriately skipped.

Several aspects of the recoding should be emphasized. First, in many instances, the respondent was asked to answer a question by marking more than one response category ("Mark all that apply"). In scanning the questionnaires, Intran treated each response category as a separate variable. The contractor left a response category blank if it was unmarked, since the scanner could not tell if the respondent meant to leave that particular response blank and mark another in the series or if the respondent left all of the response categories in the series blank. In those instances, the function of recoding was to treat the series of responses as an interrelated series and to assign values of "not marked" to blank response categories.

Second, the questionnaires contained instances in which a particular item was appropriately skipped by more than one group of respondents. Whenever possible, separate codes were assigned to the different "not applicable" categories in the recoding.

Third, to some extent, recoding was used to create new variables that would more clearly distinguish a special category of respondents or responses which might simplify subsequent analyses.

None of the recoding, however, changed any of the data provided by the respondent; only blanks were recoded. In other words, recoding was not used as a process of modifying the data base by either eliminating extra data or by making assumptions about what "correct" responses should be. We give two examples below:

1. A number of respondents who gave their marital status as divorced nevertheless provided information about "wife's education." According to the instructions, respondents who "are not married now" should have skipped these items. In recoding the file, blank values in "wife's education" were checked against marital status and either a "missing" or "not applicable" code assigned. However, filled in values for the "wife's education" variable provided by individuals for whom the question should have been "not applicable," e.g., divorced, were left in the file. Analysts can either assume that marital status is correct and recode "wife's education" further or select a subgroup for analysis, e.g., only "married" or "separated" individuals in this example, and the extra data will automatically be eliminated from the tabulations.
2. A number of respondents who indicated that they "did not" sign up for a job that paid a bonus nevertheless provided a "bonus amount." In recoding the file, blank values in "bonus amount" were checked against the item indicating whether or not a bonus was received. If the respondent indicated that a bonus was received, an audit code of -1 (missing) was assigned. If the respondent indicated that a bonus was not received, a "not applicable" code was assigned. Discrepant cases, however, were not recoded. The analyst will have to decide, in this example, whether to accept the bonus amount and assume that the indication of whether or not a bonus was received is in error or whether to select for analysis only individuals who indicated receiving a bonus.

In the recoding, special attention was paid to grid responses that were either erroneously left-justified or contained imbedded blanks. The raw marginal distributions for gridded items indicated that machine algorithms could not easily be developed for adjusting the data without extensive, almost case-by-case, review of the errors. Even if a pattern of error could be detected which would allow for algorithmic adjustment, users might raise objections to the recoding assumptions. As a result, in the recoding, all such responses have been assigned an audit code (-4) defined as "incomplete data provided by the respondent." As the subsequent discussion indicates, only about 10 percent of the questionnaires contained one error of this type; therefore its overall magnitude does not appear serious.

The review of marginals for grid response items also indicated that some responses that were technically accurate were, in fact, substantively highly unlikely. More specifically, the responses were outside of a plausible range of responses. For example, the grid associated with the year of birth item allows for entry of numbers between 00-69. References such as 18 or 69 are technically correct but outside a plausible range. In processing, upper and lower boundaries were established for all such items and an audit code (-4) assigned to out-of-range values.

DMDC has, however, maintained auxiliary tapes in which the incomplete and out-of-range entries are present, i.e. tapes in which audit code values of -4 have not been assigned. If a user has the resources to undertake data reconstruction for items with imbedded blanks or wants to expand the ranges for items, DMDC can make such auxiliary files available. Obviously, if reconstruction were successfully completed by any user for any variable, the results would be made available to all known users.

ANALYTIC IMPLICATIONS OF DATA PROCESSING PROCEDURES

As indicated above, the data processing procedures included assumptions about the handling of data in grids and extra data. Here we summarize the assumptions and processing decisions and offer suggestions to data users.

1. Incomplete grid entries do not appear on these files; they have been assigned audit codes. We assumed that data reconstruction, if possible, would not change the basic distributions of these continuous variables. As indicated above, the incomplete data are available from DMDC for review and reconstruction attempts.
2. Ranges have been defined for continuous variables, i.e. responses in grids. The ranges for each variable, defined in Sections V and VI, have been selected on the basis of either information, e.g., birthdate of enlistee, or judgement. A conservative approach was used in defining ranges; the range selected is slightly broader than the available information, and preliminary analysis indicate that it should be. The data are available from DMDC for the user who wishes to expand the the ranges even further.
3. Multiple entries have been resolved in variables for which a definite criterion for selection could be established. Data resulting from such a resolution are identified by special flags, enabling analysts to eliminate information coded through this method.
4. Extra data resulting from skip pattern errors have been retained on the files. Possibly extraneous data provided by the respondent were not edited out by assigning them a "not applicable" code. The "not applicable" code was assigned only when the respondent left an item blank on the basis of an instruction.

The user will have to judge the possible impact of extra data on each analysis. In some cases, the elimination of such data may be straightforward; in other cases, problematic. For example, some individuals who coded marital status as "single, never married" nevertheless provided information about a spouse. An analyst may want to assume that marital status was correct and delete the information about a spouse by analyzing "marital status." The decision to eliminate data is more ambiguous and therefore more difficult to make in situations where both the criterion variable, e.g., type of bonus, and the subsequent question, amount of bonus, contradict each other.

To aid the user in identifying sets of questions that are part of legitimate skip patterns, special notations have been included in Sections V and VI. The notation "QUESTION XX IS NOT ANSWERED BY ALL RESPONDENTS" appears above such items, followed by a reference to an earlier item or an explanation of respondent categories that should have answered the items. Also included with each question in Sections V and VI are the exact skip instructions printed on the questionnaire instructing respondents to leave certain questions unanswered.

QUALITY CHECKS AND INDICATORS

Survey research is always subject to some degree of respondent error, some unintentional and some deliberate. Unintentional errors may result from misunderstanding an item. For example, a widowed respondent might answer items about the spouse, even though the item instruction is for "married now" persons. Unintentional errors can also occur in recording a response, e.g., in left-justification in a grid or by marking a bubble across from a response category other than the one intended. These unintentional errors may result from technical problems with the questionnaire which were not adequately solved prior to survey administration, or from a range of factors related to the respondent (e.g., the respondent may have been interrupted or distracted while completing the questionnaire).

Respondent error may also arise through deliberate questionnaire mismarking on the part of the respondent. An individual who is annoyed or inconvenienced by the survey has the option of refusing to participate. However, it is also possible to find a respondent who answers randomly without reading items or who deliberately chooses to make false responses. Another example, though less extreme, is the respondent who cooperates in the beginning of the survey but either loses interest or motivation and, therefore, either finishes with random responses or simply does not complete sections of the questionnaire.

Several analyses to assess the effect of respondent errors on the overall quality of the data are currently under way. These analyses will be reported in a separate document. Several preliminary steps in the analyses are described below, and information is given to aid data users in determining the quality of the data.

One approach to determining data quality is to examine the extent to which audit codes for missing, uncodable, incomplete, or out-of-range data were assigned. Although different items vary in complexity for the respondents, for the present purpose one can assume that a gross count of these codes, by Form, can be of use in assessing quality. Table 2 contains a distribution of the number of questionnaires by the number of missing or uncodable data codes (-1). The data in the table are not directly comparable across both Forms, since the number of possible missing or uncodable codes varies. Although each Form contained more than 270 data elements which could have been coded as missing or uncodable by each respondent, examination of Table 2 shows that for both Forms, approximately 70 percent of the questionnaires contained less than 10 percent missing data, i.e. less than 30 audit codes per questionnaire. In addition, the number of respondents who returned questionnaires with substantial data gaps, i.e. more than 176 audit codes, is quite small. These cases, however, are currently on the data files. Before such cases can be eliminated, it is important to establish whether their exclusion would bias the data in any definite ways. For the present, we assume that each analyst will make independent decisions about elimination of incomplete cases. Another way to assess data quality is to examine the distribution of questionnaires by the number of variables with incomplete or out-of-range data codes (-4), as shown in Table 3. The data in Table 3 indicate that grid entries, when made, were not a serious problem in these questionnaires.

As part of our work, we have written a series of "quality checks" for each Form to check each respondent's record for data inconsistencies and the presence of information in certain critical variables (e.g., sex, Service). As indicated above, the data tapes have not been edited to eliminate inconsistencies or extra data, and audit codes exist where applicable. The quality checks, therefore, can provide a measure of

1. Data do not meet an interitem consistency check
2. Data do not meet a specification for a legitimate range or

Table 4 shows the frequency distribution of questionnaires by the total number of errors detected by the quality checks for each of the Forms. An examination of the data indicates that most of the respondents followed the instructions in the questionnaires and provided usable data. The quality check variables are not on the data files. Items involved in quality checks are, however, identified in Sections V and VI; e.g., Q3 shows a notation of F3, indicating that a check involving the item was written.

While examination of each of these tables certainly indicates that the data are usable, additional analysis is required before definite statements can be made about the inclusion or exclusion of specific cases. It is entirely likely, for example, that elimination of cases with multiple errors on the quality checks will also eliminate the extreme cases on the distributions of missing, uncodable, or incomplete data codes. As indicated above, all of the scanned records for each questionnaire Form are included in the data files, except those excluded because the respondent was ineligible.

The data files for the four questionnaires are organized identically. The first few variables on each record contain identifiers included as part of the processing. These are a Form number (XV1) and a questionnaire identification number (XV2). The data from the actual questionnaires follow, in questionnaire item order. The calculated minutes for completion and the AFEES codes follow. Finally, the flags set as part of resolving multiple entries appear. Table 5 below summarizes the general structure.

V. ITEM-BY-ITEM SPECIFICATIONS FOR 1979 DOD SURVEY OF PERSONNEL
ENTERING MILITARY SERVICE: FORM 3

This section contains the detailed information necessary for using specific variables from this questionnaire for analysis. Each question from the survey instrument is reproduced as it appears on the printed questionnaire, modified somewhat from the optical scanning forms which were used in the actual data collection. Optical scanning questionnaires use two basic formats, one for items in which all the response categories are pre-printed and one for items which require the respondent to enter a multi-digit numeric response. For those items on the optical scanning forms where a response is indicated by darkening a "scan bubble" next to one or more pre-printed categories, we have replaced the scan bubbles in this section with the actual numeric code assigned to the responses as a part of data processing. For those items on the optical scanning form which required the respondent to record a numeric response by entering numbers in boxes and darkening the corresponding numbers in a pre-printed optical scanning grid, we have shown just the number of boxes provided for the response. The numeric range of the scan grid is defined in the CODES section explained below.

As a visual aid, each question is enclosed in a box. As indicated in an earlier section, every question in the survey was not answered by all respondents. Instead, some items contain specific skip instructions. To aid the user in identifying items or sets of items which are part of legitimate skip patterns, a notation appears above items which should have been skipped. The notation "NOTE: QUESTION XX IS SKIPPED BY SOME RESPONDENTS, REFER TO QUESTION XY FOR SKIP INSTRUCTION" is generally used. In some instances, a special note appears before a whole section, e.g., before IV. MARRIAGE AND CHILDREN. In addition to these notations, the boxed questions contain the exact skip instructions which were printed on the questionnaire.

Immediately below each boxed question are several items of technical information required for using the data. The first, item labeled VARIABLE NAME, gives the name assigned to each variable for processing purposes. In establishing names, the questionnaire item number has been retained as much as possible with the letter "Q" used as a prefix. However, several additional conventions have been established.

- o All lower-case alpha characters have been changed to upper-case alpha characters.
- o Unnumbered sub-items of a questionnaire item have been assigned the numeric question number followed by an upper-case alpha character, e.g., Form 3, Q17 is named Q17A - Q17E.
- o Unnumbered sub-items within an alphabetic sub-item are assigned the numeric question number followed by an upper-case alpha character and followed by a sequential number, for example, Form 3, Q37A1 - Q37A2.
- o Variables which are completely unnumbered on the printed questionnaires or variables added in the course of optical scanning are assigned an XV (extra variable) series; i.e., the Questionnaire Form Code becomes XV1, the Questionnaire Identification Number becomes XV2, etc.

The conventions used for naming variables are also used in naming the quality checks or flags appended to the data. However, a flag name is preceded by the letter "F" instead of "Q," e.g., F3.

A second item, FLAG, gives the variable name assigned to the quality check associated with the variable. For all variables which do not have an associated quality check, the FLAG entry does not appear. The next item, TAPE POSITION, indicates the location of the data on the tape.

The next item, CODES, contains a complete listing of all code values assigned to the variable. The response values listed under the CODES column are more complete than those previously listed as part of the boxed question item. The CODES section also defines the AUDIT CODES which have been assigned to each variable as part of the recoding process; i.e., the various "not applicable" responses or missing value codes assigned during the RECODING are explained. In the case of items which required a multi-digit numeric response, the allowable range of

Finally, the section below each question may contain special notes to the user. These NOTES provide additional information on the interpretation of the data and alert the user to special procedures which may have been followed in preparing the data for a specific variable.

Note: This page and the following page are reproductions of the Cover Page and Instructions provided to all respondents as part of the questionnaire

- I. Use a NO. 2 PENCIL.
- II. Read each question carefully. Make a HEAVY BLACK MARK that FILLS THE CIRCLE next to your answer.
- III. If the question asks for a DATE, mark the MONTH AND YEAR.

EXAMPLE: When did you first talk to this recruiter? Mark the Month and Year. If you talked to this recruiter in APRIL 1978, you would mark your answer as shown below.

-----MONTH-----		-----YEAR-----
☐ January	☐ July	☐ 1979	☐ 1973
☐ February	☐ August	☐ 1978	☐ 1972
☐ March	☐ September	☐ 1977	☐ 1971
☐ April	☐ October	☐ 1976	☐ 1970 or before
☐ May	☐ November	☐ 1975
☐ June	☐ December	☐ 1974

 - o Write the numbers in the BOXES, making sure that the LAST NUMBER is always placed in the RIGHT-HAND BOX.
 - o FILL in the UNUSED BOXES with ZEROS.

$	02	.	50
	00		00
	11		11
	ETC.

- V. Some questions also contain instructions about what to do next. The instruction depends on the answer you mark.

Q.46. Since you were 16 years old, have you ever had a full time or part time job?

- () Yes - ANSWER Q. 47-53
() No - GO TO Q.54

EXAMPLE: Suppose you have never had a full time or part time job. You would mark your answer as shown, then GO TO Q.54. This instruction tells you that you should leave QS. 47-53 BLANK, and start answering again at Q.54. In many of these questions, arrows will point to the next question you should answer.

Note: For a subset of items, the contractor was provided with instructions for resolving respondent multiple entries. If only one response was required but the respondent marked two, the contractor coded either the highest or lowest value, depending on the item. Whenever the multiple logic instruction was used, a code was set in one of the above variables, XV6 - XV19.

XV31	Flag for QXV5	551

Codes: -4 Response contains grid entry error
 00 No grid entry error detected

Note: For a subset of items, the contractor was provided with instructions for handling omitted responses on grids as follows:

- o If totally blank, a value of -1 is entered; i.e., the data is coded as Missing in the tape positions assigned to the variable.
- o If the data entered is right-justified, zero-fill from the left.
- o If the data entered is left-justified or an entry error is made, leave as coded by the respondent with blanks either imbedded in the response or in the right-most positions.

In processing the data, no effort has been made to resolve problems of left-justification or imbedded blanks. However, to aid the analyst, a grid error entry flag of -4 has been set corresponding to each item which can have errors of this type.

Example: Q9 requires an entry of a three-digit Monthly Basic Pay.

- o If totally blank, a value of -1 is in Q9 and 00 in XV.
- o If the respondent entered "X18", where X=blank, a value of "018" is in Q9 and 00 in XV.
- o If the respondent entered "4X8" or "41X", where x=blank, values of either "4X8" or "41X" are in Q9 and -4 is in XV.

- o The Department of Defense may collect the information requested in the DoD Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service under the authority of 10 United States Code 136.

- I. Use a NO. 2 PENCIL.
- II. Read each question carefully. Make a HEAVY BLACK MARK that FILLS THE CIRCLE next to your answer.
- III. If the question asks for a DATE, mark the MONTH AND YEAR.

EXAMPLE: When did you first talk to this recruiter? Mark the Month and Year. If you talked to this recruiter in APRIL 1978, you would mark your answer as shown below.

-----MONTH-----		-----YEAR-----
☐ January	☐ July	☐ 1979	☐ 1973
☐ February	☐ August	☐ 1978	☐ 1972
☐ March	☐ September	☐ 1977	☐ 1971
☐ April	☐ October	☐ 1976	☐ 1970 or before
☐ May	☐ November	☐ 1975
☐ June	☐ December	☐ 1974

- IV. If the question asks for a NUMBER, you should do THREE THINGS:

- o Write the numbers in the BOXES, making sure that the LAST NUMBER is always placed in the RIGHT-HAND BOX.
- o FILL in the UNUSED BOXES with ZEROS.
- o Mark the MATCHING CIRCLE BELOW EACH BOX.

EXAMPLE: About how much did you earn per hour at your last job? Suppose you earned $ 2.50 per hour. You would enter the number as shown below.

DOLLARS		CENTS
$	02	.	50
	00		00
	11		11
	22		22
	ETC.

- V. Some questions also contain instructions about what to do next. The instruction depends on the answer you mark.

Q.46. Since you were 16 years old have you ever had a full time or part time job?

- ☐ Yes - ANSWER Q. 47-53
☐ No - GO TO Q.54

EXAMPLE: Suppose you have never had a full time or part time job. You would mark your answer as shown, then GO TO Q.54. This instruction tells you that you should leave QS. 47-53 BLANK, and start answering again at Q.54. In many of these questions, arrows will point to the next question you should answer.

Note: For a subset of items, the contractor was provided with instructions for handling omitted responses on grids as follows:

- o If totally blank, a value of -1 is entered; i.e., the data is coded as Missing in the tape positions assigned to the variable.
- o If the data entered is right-justified, zero-fill from the left.
- o If the data entered is left-justified or an entry error is made, leave as coded by the respondent with blanks either imbedded in the response or in the right-most positions.

In processing the data, no effort has been made to resolve problems of left-justification or imbedded blanks. However, to aid the analyst, a grid error entry flag of -4 has been set corresponding to each entry which can have errors of this type.

Example: Q5 requires an entry of a three-digit Monthly Basic Pay.

- o If totally blank, a value of -1 is in Q5 and 00 in XV23.
- o If the respondent entered "x18," where x = blank, a value of "018" is in Q5 and 00 in XV23.
- o If the respondent entered "4x8" or "41x," where x = blank, values of either "4x8" or "41x" are in Q5 and -4 is in XV23.

Appendix A

ADMINISTRATION DATES AND NUMBER OF RESPONDENTS SURVEYED

The survey period for the 1979 Survey of Personnel Entering Military Service was defined as 20 consecutive working days following the receipt of survey materials. This period was to include any Saturdays the AFEES was in operation. The first day of the survey period was to be defined as a full working day. For example, if materials were received in mid-morning, administration was to begin the next day. As a result of shipment problems, combined with operational problems at some of the AFEES, the starting date varied by as much as a month.

Table A shows, by AFEES, the starting and ending dates of survey administration, together with the total number of days on which data was collected. In assembling this information, two sources of information were used. First, a Survey Record Form submitted by each AFEES as part of the return shipment of questionnaires contained administration dates. Second, the actual questionnaires asked respondents to record the date on which the survey was completed. In calculating the number of days, Saturdays were only counted if a questionnaire was received which included the date of a Saturday within the survey period.

The number of questionnaires reflects the actual number of completed instruments received by the Defense Manpower Data Center (DMDC), excluding those which have been deleted as having been completed by an individual who was either entering the Marine Corps Reserve, the Army Reserve or who had prior military service. Blank questionnaires or questionnaires marked as "refused" have also been excluded from the table.

The difference between the number of Form 3 and Form 4 questionnaires returned by each AFEES is the result of excluding questionnaires completed by ineligible respondents and questionnaires marked "refused." In the actual shipments received by the AFEES, the two forms were alternated; i.e., equal numbers of each form were sent.

The AFEES identification number was added to each questionnaire as part of the processing at DMDC. Questionnaires without identifiers were either mismarked at DMDC or received in a shipment without an AFEES identification.

Appendix B

CROSS-REFERENCE OF FORM 3 QUESTIONNAIRE TO FORM 1,
FORM 2 AND FORM 4 QUESTIONNAIRES

As indicated in Section III, the 1979 AFES Survey is composed of a set of four questionnaires: Forms 1 and 2 were administered in Wave 1 (Spring) and Forms 3 and 4 were administered in Wave 2 (Fall).

In addition to a set of items common to all four forms, items related to different policy issues were clustered in questionnaire pairs. Items designed to collect detailed information about the enlistment process were clustered in Forms 1 and 3. Items identified as possible predictors of attrition, together with items asked specifically of female enlistees, were clustered in Forms 2 and 4.

This appendix allows the user to determine the question number(s) for items in Form 3 which also appear on one of the other forms. It is an ordered listing of every item in Form 3, i.e., in the same order as the questionnaire in Section V, together with precise question referents to the other three questionnaires, i.e., to Forms 1, 2, and 4. In using this appendix, the user should not assume that the response codes assigned to questions which have been cross-referenced are identical. Although in most cases they are the same across forms, before comparing actual data the codebooks should be consulted. The notes appended to the end of the cross-reference listing alert the user to some of these differences.

Appendix C

CROSS-REFERENCE OF FORM 4 QUESTIONNAIRE TO FORM 1,
FORM 2 AND FORM 3 QUESTIONNAIRES

As indicated in Section III, the 1979 AFES Survey is composed of a set of four questionnaires: Forms 1 and 2 were administered in Wave 1 (Spring) and Forms 3 and 4 were administered in Wave 2 (Fall).

In addition to a set of items common to all four forms, items related to different policy issues were clustered in questionnaire pairs. Items designed to collect detailed information about the enlistment process were clustered in Forms 1 and 3. Items identified as possible predictors of attrition, together with items asked specifically of female enlistees, were clustered in Forms 2 and 4.

This appendix allows the user to determine the question number(s) for items in Form 4 which also appear on one of the other forms. It is an ordered listing of every item in Form 4, i.e., in the same order as the questionnaire in Section VI, together with precise question referents to the other three questionnaires, i.e., to Forms 1, 2, and 3. In using this appendix, the user should not assume that the response codes assigned to questions which have been cross-referenced are identical. Although in most cases they are the same across forms, before comparing actual data the codebooks should be consulted. The notes appended to the end of the cross-reference listing alert the user to some of these differences.
