PREFACE

Fluctuating water levels on Lake Erie have caused extensive damage to private and public facilities during the past 50 years. During an average year, the lake may fluctuate 2 to 4 feet, and over a 30 year period the fluctuation has reached nearly 50 feet. The Corps of Engineers, under the direction of the International Joint Commission and in cooperation with the Canadian Government, is evaluating the feasibility of partial regulation of Lake Erie to eliminate high water peaks. MRI was employed as a consultant by the Buffalo District, Corps of Engineers, to evaluate one part of the entire project--the impacts on recreation boating facilities and beaches.

The study area included Lakes Erie and Ontario and the connecting waterways from Massena, New York on the St. Lawrence to Port Huron, Michigan. The research program was a massive year-long effort and included the following types of inventories, surveys, and analyses:

1. Recreation inventory: Three field crews operating out of recreation vehicles inventoried all boating facilities and beaches in the study area.
2. Surveys of recreation and other commercial uses: Utilizing boat license numbers collected during the field inventory, MRI conducted a mailout survey of recreation boaters currently mooring boats in the study area. In addition, MRI conducted a survey of commercial fishermen and charter/passenger boat operators. The Buffalo District collected information on the current use of the Black Rock Lock in Buffalo by recreation boaters.
3. Analysis of data: MRI utilized a proprietary model, COMPATRAX, to forecast beach visitation and estimate recreation benefits. Impacts on boating was determined through use of the Corps "Small Boat Harbor Formula."

The total study by MRI is contained in a series of reports that are available for distribution through the Buffalo District, Corps of Engineers office.

MRI wishes to express its thanks to the Buffalo District's Staff as well as the state representatives of the four states involved (Michigan, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania). We would also like to thank the many beach and boating facility operators/managers for their cooperation in providing information during the study. Without their help it would have been impossible to estimate impacts resulting from lake level regulation on beaches and boating facilities.

The overall manager for the study was Mr. Raymond Mischon, Manager, Leisure/Recreation Programs. He was closely assisted in the survey and inventory effort by Ms. Greta O'Keefe, Senior Recreation Economist. The field inventory and survey of commercial and charter boat operators was under the direction of Mr. Thomas Peterson, Assistant Recreation Economist. The field inventory was conducted primarily by nine students from the Midwest who suffered the hardships of camping in the field for 2 months under trying circumstances. Field crews were supplemented by MRI permanent staff during the latter phases of the inventory.

INTRODUCTION

This volume contains a complete listing of the facilities inventoried by MRI in evaluating the impacts of the lake level regulation program. We believe this is a complete canvas of all facilities on Lakes Erie and Ontario and connecting waterways from Massena, New York to Port Huron, Michigan. The connecting waterways includes the St. Lawrence River, the Niagara River, the Detroit River, Lake St. Clair, and the St. Clair River. Although the field crews used navigation maps, aerial photos, existing recreation inventories and drove along the shoreline stopping periodically to ask questions about facilities, there may be smaller facilities not included in the inventory, particularly marinas with less than 10 slips. It was extremely difficult to identify the difference between a community dock (one where 3 or 4 owners built the dock for their own use) and a small facility operated solely for the profit it generated. It was also difficult in many cases to identify a public beach. The criteria utilized by the crews were as follows:

- The beach must be designated as a beach for public use, including one reserved for use by a specific community;
- It had to have some type of sponsoring agency, individual, corporation, or entrepreneur, etc., managing the beach for public use; and
- There had to be some types of improvement associated with the beach (e.g., bath house, restroom facilities, concession stand, etc.).

Since the inventory was conducted throughout the week, field crews often times had difficulty locating a knowledgeable person to interview and obtain information about the facilities. Sometimes the information came from a nearby private facility operator, such as a service station manager. Thus, there is the possibility that small, rather obscure community beaches and marinas have been missed in the inventory. The crews were instructed to return to a site, if information was lacking, up to three times while they were in the area. Additionally, if a telephone number was obtained, MRI staff called from our main office and attempted to contact the person in charge of the facility. Even using this procedure, we were only able to obtain partial information for a number of facilities.

This volume has been prepared for use by individuals interested in recreation beaches and boating facilities. The person might be a public agency planner or a private entrepreneur interested in facilities in a particular area. The inventory may also be used by a recreation user (e.g., a recreation boater) interested in obtaining information about facilities in a harbor/bay that he might utilize on a long distance overnight cruise.

The facilities have been classified by waterway or lake and further segregated into reaches (Lake Erie and Ontario) to enhance the use of the inventory. Suppose an individual wishes to learn about the available facilities in an area. For example, suppose a boater is traveling from his homeport in Rochester, New York to Alexandria Bay on the St. Lawrence River. He is interested in the type of facilities that might be available upon his arrival. He would first go to the Small Scale Location Map of Boating Facilities. He would learn that boating facilities No. 15 through 22 are located in this area. He would then simply go to the inventory and examine the size of the marinas and facilities available. If he were traveling to an area on Lake Ontario the second level map (Large Scale Location Maps for Boating Facilities) identifies the particular harbor/bays and the number of facilities in those harbors. He would then use the same procedure and assess the availability of facilities in the harbor/bay of interest.

The same procedure could be utilized by a recreation planner interested in beaches along a particular area of shoreline on any of the lakes or waterways. Large scale location maps were not required for the beaches since there were fewer, and they tended to be scattered along the shoreline except in certain instances along Lake Erie where private beaches such as those associated with hotel beaches, etc., tended to dominate.

Another type of use that could be made of the inventory is where a planner is interested in the beach at a particular location. For example, suppose a public planner is planning another beach development in the area between Rochester and Oswego on Lake Ontario. He is interested in the types of beaches already developed in this area. He would find that there are seven beaches located in this area (see Small Scale Map of Beaches). Three are near Rochester, two are on Sodus Bay and one is on Little Sodus Bay. He could then go to the inventory and identify the beach by name, and obtain the type and amount of fee, and some of the facilities available at the beaches.

Although quality control was closely maintained during the inventory, there may be additional beaches and boating facilities. If users of the inventory find questionable information, they are encouraged to call the Buffalo District Corps of Engineers and notify them about possible errors.

APPENDIX A

INVENTORY FORM AND FIELD PROCEDURE
(Recreation Beaches)

INVENTORY FORM AND FIELD PROCEDURE

The purpose of this appendix is to provide users of the inventory with information about the availability of data and field procedure utilized in collecting the data. This will enable the user to determine if the information he is interested in is available, and the degree of precision that might be provided in the inventory.

Inventory Form

Since MRI did not receive contract approval until well into the Month of May, MRI had to begin training the field crews and preparing preliminary inventory forms at the same time. When the inventory was initiated during the week of June 16, the crews only had preliminary inventory forms which had not even been reviewed by the Buffalo District. While members of MRI's study team were training the field crews in the Buffalo area, senior MRI staff worked with the Buffalo District and developed an approved preliminary inventory form.

At this point the form had not been field tested to determine whether the questions were answerable, or if they were sequenced in the proper order. Therefore, during the first week of the inventory, senior staff remained on-site, made the necessary changes and presented a finalized uncoded version of the inventory to the Buffalo District. This was further field tested during the second week of study. Finally by the third week of study, the final coded form had been developed, and the crews were working efficiently in collecting the information. The inventory forms for the recreation beaches and boating facilities are included in this Appendix.

MRI crews utilized the field procedure described below:

1. Training of the crews: Prior to departing for Buffalo on June 16, MRI senior staff interviewed and selected nine college students which subsequently staffed three separate crews. Approximately 1 week was spent in Kansas City training these crews on the probable types of information to be collected, basic statistical problems that might be encountered, and the use of the equipment that would be utilized during the inventory.

Upon arrival in Buffalo, the first several days enabled the crews to become acquainted with the operation of 25 foot recreation vehicles, which would be their home for the next several months. As noted above, MRI senior staff remained in the field for several weeks making sure the crews fully understood the inventory form, how to collect the data, and how to use the equipment. Periodically throughout the summer (approximately every 2 weeks) a senior staff member would again visit the teams to make sure that quality control was being maintained. Throughout the study, the inventory forms which were being mailed on a weekly basis to MRI, were reviewed and crews were debriefed by phone periodically regarding specific data elements and problems encountered in coding the data. Toward the end of the study, as the students went back to college, associate level staff members from MRI completed the inventory. The final inventory form was completed on September 14, 1979.

One crew inventoried beaches and boating facilities on Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River. The two other crews covered the area from Buffalo, west to Port Huron on the St. Clair River. Each morning the crew leaders would brief the crews and begin driving the shoreline using maps, aerial photos, and existing inventories to identify beaches and boating facilities. As these facilities were identified, they stopped and interviewed operators/managers of the facilities. When an operator was unavailable, the crews were instructed to return up to three times, or call if the telephone number was available. MRI also followed up from the main office and attempted to complete inventories where missing information was noted.

2. Methods of measurement: The inventories included two sections. The first section included general information, such as name/address of the facility, telephone number, ownership/administration, types of fees and the impacts that the owner/operators viewed would occur if the lake level regulation program was initiated. Each inventory form also included types of facilities and services available at the particular beach or boating facility.

The following procedure was utilized to collect the information regarding beach measurements. After the interview had been completed, the crew would examine the beach. They were required, as will be noted, to obtain measurements for both the dry and wet beaches. If the beach was under 1,000 feet in length (this was the first measurement taken with a wheeled device), the crews would randomly select a starting point between 1 and 100 feet, they would then take 10 cross-sections of the dry beach at intervals along the lineal expanse of beach based on one-tenth of the total length. This guaranteed a random starting point, with a systematic selection of cross-sections for the dry beach. The width of the dry beach and the slope of the dry beach was recorded for the 10 points. The crew also recorded the type of dry beach material. At each cross-section, one of the crew members would wade into the water and record either the depth at 150 feet from the shoreline, or the distance to a level equivalent to the 5 foot depth--whichever came first. At this point they would also note the bottom material of the wet beach.

If the beaches were longer than 1,000 feet, the crews were instructed to take additional measurements. At very long beaches, such as at Presque Isle State Park, in Pennsylvania, the crews divided the beaches into mini beaches and took 10 cross-sections of each mini beach. These statistics were subsequently averaged and applied to the total length of all beaches in the Park.

3. Equipment: Crews used different pieces of equipment to take the measurements required on both the beaches and boating facilities. Where long distances were encountered (e.g., lineal feet of beach), measuring wheels were utilized. On the shorter cross-sections, as well as measuring the length of the slips and boats, 100 foot steel tapes were used. Measuring the distance to the 5 foot depth of the wet beach required a slightly different approach. It was learned early in the study that steep tapes tended to pick up sand and had to be disassembled each night and cleaned out. To get around this problem, nylon ropes were purchased and 5 foot measurements were knotted. Plastic streamers were used at the 25 foot knot interval. Therefore, the crews could very quickly assess distances such as 50 feet, 100 feet, 150 feet, etc.

The slopes of the beach were taken using Abney hand levels. As will be noted in the form, the degree measure, rather than percent, was used to determine the slope of the beach.

Finally, depth was taken using plastic range poles. They came assembled in 4 foot lengths and could be screwed together where deep measures were required. However, maximum measurements in the study were limited to 12 feet. It was felt that any depth beyond this point would not be seriously affected by lake level regulation. In addition to this equipment, each crew carried the usual supporting equipment, such as clipboards, tables of random numbers, and plastic laminated cards to enable determining the boat class/length and dock construction type/material.

4. Verification of the inventory: Throughout the study, associate and senior level MRI staff periodically visited the crews in the field. As they picked up the forms, MRI staff returned to sites to check over selected measures. If any consistent error was noted, the crews were briefed and subsequent readings were closely checked. As the forms were returned to MRI, a randomly selected sample of facility owner/operators were selected and telephoned to determine if they had been interviewed, and/or asked to repeat some of their answers to the questions. After the inventory was completed each form was closely checked and additional calls were made to acquire missing data.

5. Coding, keypunching, verification, and editing: After completing the survey, all information was coded directly on the attached form. Some of the early interviews were recorded on the first and second draft of the inventory form. Therefore, that data had to be transferred to the final inventory form. After coding had been completed, it was keypunched and verified. Finally, a group of edit programs were written to check the consistency of the data. For example, for a particular reach the fluctuation of the water level during the period of the inventory was known. This was one of the pieces of information that the coders transferred onto the forms. Since the information came from a complex set of graphs and tables, it was easy to make an error in transferring the information. Therefore, the program simply identified any facility that exceeded the fluctuation limits for a reach during the period of the inventory. This same procedure was used to check the number of cards, consistency questions, occupancy rates, and a variety of other data elements. All of this was done prior to undertaking any analysis of the data base.

EXPLANATION: As you know, the water level of the lake, over the years, has fluctuated as much as two to four feet/year. The Corps of Engineers is currently evaluating the feasibility of partial regulation of Lake Erie to eliminate high water peaks, such as happened in 1973. This may mean lowering the average water level of Lake Erie by as much as six inches and that of the other Great Lakes to a lesser degree.

If the lake level were thus regulated, what effects on your beach would you foresee?
