SOVIET DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS AND REPRESENTATION

This paper, intended as an informal research aid, lists those countries with which the USSR has diplomatic, consular, and/or commercial relations and includes the name, date of accreditation, and CPSU Central Committee membership (where applicable) of each Soviet ambassador. Also listed are countries with which the USSR has not exchanged diplomatic representation but which it has recognized, either unilaterally or reciprocally. Unilateral Soviet recognition, indicated in the "Notes" column, is recognition generally extended to a new nation by an official statement without reciprocation from the recognized party (Antigua and Barbuda, and Belize were thus recognized by the USSR in 1981). This is a relatively informal diplomatic category which does not necessarily signify a Soviet intention to establish formal diplomatic relations.

Other aspects of representation are also included:

- Ambassadors accredited to another country, with which the USSR has diplomatic relations but where no diplomatic mission exists per se, are so indicated.
- Foreign countries which host a Soviet embassy, but which do not have diplomatic representation in the USSR, are so indicated.
- Because an embassy generally includes a consular section, only consulates separate from the embassy are specifically listed.
- "Commercial Representation" indicates commercial or economic organs (e.g., Sovexport, Sovfrakht, and Aeroflot) that have their own commercial office, or a general Commercial Representatives Office separate from the embassy. In many cases, such offices were opened prior to the establishment of a diplomatic mission.
