LATIN AMERICA REPORT

WHO'S WHO IN THE BRAZILIAN CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY

Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 19 Jan 87 Special Supplement, pp B1-B8

[Text] Almost a third of the 559 federal deputies and senators who will form the Constituent Congress which will be convened on 1 February could be classified as centrist; this percentage of congressmen, together with their near relatives (Center Right and Center Left), gives an overpowering centrist character to the future parliament.

In all, 438 deputies and senators (or 78.3 percent of the congressmen) belong to these broad political categories; this also indicates a high degree of indefiniteness, which is, incidentally, quite appropriate to a country which traditionally has little ideological homogeneity.

In any case, the forces located at the extremes of the ideological range (Left and Right) are fairly isolated. The Left will have only 52 delegates, or 9.3 percent of the total. The Right will have 69, or 12.3 percent.

In the Center, the subdivisions are as follows: the Center Right will be represented by 131 legislators (23.4 percent); the Center, strictly speaking, by 181 (32.3 percent); and the Center Left by 126 legislators (22.5 percent).

The classification adopted by FOLHA clearly has an inevitable measure of subjectivity, resulting particularly from the fact that most of the politicians ascribed a political label to themselves, which was not always the one which the public would generally apply to them. Moreover, the constant changes in parties and even in positions on the great national political issues make it difficult to arrive at a stricter classification. In any event, FOLHA preferred to run the risk of an imperfect classification of the congressmen by letting them say for themselves what label they think fits them.

Benches

The dominance of the Center was more or less predictable; however, now that the complete list of the victors in the 15 November elections is available, it is somewhat surprising to find that the Left is not so weak--if not in number, at least in quality--as had been imagined.

In fact, the leftist bench includes such weighty ideologues as Florestan Fernandes, elected by the Sao Paulo PT [Workers Party]; respected congressional leaders, such as Bahian Francisco Pinto, of the PMDB [Brazilian Democratic Movement Party]; and a healthy lot of union leaders who left factories and offices to run for Congress. These would include, among others, Olivio Dutro, a banker from Rio Grande do Sul, and Sao Paulo metalworker Luis Inacio Lula da Silva, both of the PT, and Rio de Janeiro metalworker Valentim dos Santos, of the PC do B (Communist Party of Brazil).

Another qualitatively powerful bench is that of the defenders of ultra-liberalism. It includes three former economic ministers, to wit: Antonio Delfim Netto (PDS [Social Democratic Party]-Sao Paulo), Francisco Dornelles (PLF [Liberal Front Party]-Rio de Janeiro) and Roberto Campos (PDS - Mato Grosso do Norte). They are in the company of other dedicated liberals such as Guilherme Afif Domingos (Sao Paulo) and Alvaro Valle (Rio de Janeiro), both of the PL (Liberal Party).

The debate on economic issues, particularly on the nationalization of the economy, will tend to be the richest in the Constituent Congress, inasmuch as the scales will be balanced by heavyweights of the caliber of Jose Serra, former secretary of planning of Sao Paulo (PMDB), Senator Severo Gomez, also of the Sao Paulo PMDB, elected in 1982; and Cesar Maia (PDT [Democratic Workers' Party]-Rio de Janeiro), another former secretary in the economic area; not to mention sociologist Fernando Henrique Cardoso, who was reelected by the Sao Paulo OMDB and who moves freely in the economic area.

Meanwhile, the institutional issues offer an equal guarantee of distinguished debates. Some of the above-mentioned delegates will also take part in these debates as well, but the spotlights will be focused on such names as Ulysses Guimaraes, a typical exponent of the Center; Afonso Arinos, who led the Constitutional Studies Commission, conceived by Tancredo Neves; Jose Richa, of Parana, another centrist star; and Pernambucan Fernano de Lyra (PMDB), who is located on the Center Left.

The Federal Government will not even need institutional channels for liaison with the Congress, inasmuch as the president can count on his own son, Federal Deputy Sarney Filho (PFL-Maranhao), another rising centrist. Aluisio Alves, secretary of administration, also has a son in the Congress: Henrique Eduardo Alves (PMDB-Rio Grande do Norte), another centrist; and Communications Minister Antonio Carlos Magalhaes saw to the election of his son, Luis Eduardo Maron Magalhaes, by the Bahian PFL, swelling the ranks of the Right.

Parties and Ideologies

The ideological division is not necessarily along the party lines; there are PMDB members, such as Senator Irapuan Costa Junior (Goiias), who have entered into a relationship with the rightists, just as Bahian Federal Deputy Domingos Leonelli has done with the Left. This means that the debates will reflect personal positions more than party orientations.

To reinforce the numerically scanty block representing the pure Left, it should be borne in mind that the Center Left bench is, qualitatively, deeper than that of the Center Right, leading one to believe that, by the force of its arguments and its rhetoric, this Center Left could push the "Big Center" (in the end, the largest group numerically) somewhat more to the left.

For this reason, as well, it is impossible to predict with any assurance the direction the constitutional debate will take.

It is clear that the new constitution will not be socialist or fascist; however, in the huge space between these extremes, there is room for a series of intermediate definitions, which cannot be predicted for certain, particularly because the Center is a powerful majority, and this presents a broad pallet, from which only the labors of the future Congress will lead to a clear selection.

Table 3: Age of the Congressmen

Table 4: Renovation of the Congress

Key:

1. Congressmen elected for the first time, or who had already served in the other chamber.
2. Congressmen returning to the Chamber or Senate after a period of absence from the chamber to which they were elected in 1986.
3. Senators elected in 1982, whose term expires in 1990.

Debates Which Will Polarize the Constituent Assembly

Armed Forces

The conservatives defend the constitutional role of the military as the guardians of the constitution. The Left and Center want to limit the role of the Armed Forces to the defense of the nation's sovereignty and its borders.

Jarbas Passarinho (PDS-Para), a reserve officer, defends the conservative position.

Edison Lobao (PFL-Maranhao) is aligned with former President Ernesto Geisel and the military.

Afonso Arinos (PFL-Rio de Janeiro): In the initial version of the constitution drafted by the commission which he chaired, the duty of the military is to maintain the nation's sovereignty. In the final text, a conciliatory solution was sought; the military would ensure domestic order, as determined by the constitutional powers.

Florestan Fernandes (PT-Sao Paulo) wants the military far removed from politics.

Parliamentarism/Presidentialism

On one side are the various defenders of parliamentarism; on the other side are candidates to succeed President Sarney, who do not look favorably on reducing the powers of the president.

Luis Viana Filho (PMDB-Bahia) is a parliamentarist (he belongs to the defunct Liberation Party, which advocated this system, but he has served in centralizing governments).

Jarbas Passarinho (PDS-Para) is a presidentialist.

Ulysses Guimaraes (PMDB-Sao Paulo) is a candidate to succeed Sarney.

Afonso Arinos (PFL-Rio de Janeiro) was one of the defenders of parliamentarism in the commission which he chaired.

Economic Order

The debate will be divided among those who defend state intervention in the economy and those who prefer a free market economy, with minimum state presence.

Delfim Netto (PDS-Sao Paulo): After serving as minister and ambassador in military governments which were nationalizing the economy, he has begun to argue that the state should only provide services.

Jose Serra (PMDB-Sao Paulo): Defends state intervention, but complains about the inefficiency of the state companies.

Guilherme Afif Domingos (PL-Sao Paulo): Campaigned under the banner of "neoliberalism" and of combat against the government presence in the economy.

Albano Franco (PMDB-Sergipe): Defender of private initiative, he is president of the National Confederation of Industry (CNI).

Agrarian Reform

In theory, everyone favors it. The debate will come to blows over its implementation. The conservatives want to use unproductive land in the power of the states, the federal government and the municipios. The leftists even argue for expropriation of land in productive use.

Roberto Cardoso (PMDB-Sao Paulo) is pointed to as the leader of the bench identified with the UDR (Ruralist Democratic Union) in the constituent Congress; he criticizes his party's agrarian reform policy.

Guilherme Afif Domingos (PL-Sao Paulo) believes that the policy of settlement along the Sao Paulo railway lines has generated more wealth than agrarian reform.

Alysson Paulinelli (PFL-Minas Gerais) was minister of agriculture in the Geisel administration (1974-78). He is president of the Minas Gerais Agricultural Association and received the support of the UDR in his election campaign.

Plinio de Arruda Sampaio (PT-Sao Paulo) is president of ABRA (Brazilian Agrarian Reform Society), in opposition to the UDR, and wants the expropriation of land to go forward faster.

Strikes and Unions

Everyone agrees that the unions should no longer be under the oversight of the Labor Ministry. The disagreements will surface over the right to strike.

Luis Inacio Lula da Silva (PT-Sao Paulo): Leader of the major strikes in the greater Sao Paulo area at the end of the 1970s and early 1980s, founder of the PT and the CUT [Sole Central Union of Workers].

Albano Franco (PMDB-Sergipe): president of the National Confederation of Industry.

Jarbas Passarinho (PDS -Para) was labor minister in the Costa e Silva government.

Alvaro Valle (PL-Rio de Janeiro) defends free bargaining between labor and management.

Foreign Debt

The debates will be between those who argue for payment of the foreign debt, those who would seek better terms of payment and those who favor a pure and simple moratorium.

Delfim Netto (PDS-SP) could be considered one of those who fostered the foreign debt as minister in the Costa e Silva, Medici and Figueiredo governments. He is author of the saying that the foreign debt is not paid, it is rolled over; in practice, he advocates payment.

Jose Serra (PMDB-Sao Paulo) accepts that the foreign debt should be paid as long as the payments do not exceed 2.5 to 3 percent of the country's GDP. According to Serra, the payment currently represents 4 percent of the GDP.

Roberto Campos (PDS-Mato Grosso) even oppose any discussion of the possibility of a moratorium.

Olivio Dutra (PT-Rio Grande do Sul) argues for suspension of the debt payment.
