

CRS Report for Congress

Pakistan-U.S. Relations

Updated October 18, 2007

K. Alan Kronstadt
Specialist in South Asian Affairs
Foreign Affairs, Defense, and Trade Division

Prepared for Members and Committees of Congress

Report Documentation Page				Form Approved OMB No. 0704-0188
Public reporting burden for the collection of information is estimated to average 1 hour per response, including the time for reviewing instructions, searching existing data sources, gathering and maintaining the data needed, and completing and reviewing the collection of information. Send comments regarding this burden estimate or any other aspect of this collection of information, including suggestions for reducing this burden, to Washington Headquarters Services, Directorate for Information Operations and Reports, 1215 Jefferson Davis Highway, Suite 1204, Arlington VA 22202-4302. Respondents should be aware that notwithstanding any other provision of law, no person shall be subject to a penalty for failing to comply with a collection of information if it does not display a currently valid OMB control number.
1. REPORT DATE 18 OCT 2007		2. REPORT TYPE		3. DATES COVERED 00-00-2007 to 00-00-2007
4. TITLE AND SUBTITLE Pakistan-U.S. Relations				5a. CONTRACT NUMBER
				5b. GRANT NUMBER
				5c. PROGRAM ELEMENT NUMBER
6. AUTHOR(S)				5d. PROJECT NUMBER
				5e. TASK NUMBER
				5f. WORK UNIT NUMBER
7. PERFORMING ORGANIZATION NAME(S) AND ADDRESS(ES) Congressional Research Service, The Library of Congress, 101 Independence Ave SE, Washington, DC, 20540-7500				8. PERFORMING ORGANIZATION REPORT NUMBER
9. SPONSORING/MONITORING AGENCY NAME(S) AND ADDRESS(ES)				10. SPONSOR/MONITOR'S ACRONYM(S)
				11. SPONSOR/MONITOR'S REPORT NUMBER(S)
12. DISTRIBUTION/AVAILABILITY STATEMENT Approved for public release; distribution unlimited
13. SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES
14. ABSTRACT
15. SUBJECT TERMS
16. SECURITY CLASSIFICATION OF:			17. LIMITATION OF ABSTRACT Same as Report (SAR)	18. NUMBER OF PAGES 67	19a. NAME OF RESPONSIBLE PERSON
a. REPORT unclassified	b. ABSTRACT unclassified	c. THIS PAGE unclassified

Pakistan-U.S. Relations

Summary

A stable, democratic, prosperous Pakistan is considered vital to U.S. interests. U.S. concerns regarding Pakistan include regional and global terrorism; Afghan stability; democratization and human rights protection; the ongoing Kashmir problem and Pakistan-India tensions; and economic development. A U.S.-Pakistan relationship marked by periods of both cooperation and discord was transformed by the September 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States and the ensuing enlistment of Pakistan as a key ally in U.S.-led counterterrorism efforts. Top U.S. officials regularly praise Pakistan for its ongoing cooperation, although doubts exist about Islamabad's commitment to some core U.S. interests. Pakistan is identified as a base for terrorist groups and their supporters operating in Kashmir, India, and Afghanistan. Since 2003, Pakistan's army has conducted unprecedented and largely ineffectual counterterrorism operations in the country's western tribal areas. Islamabad later shifted to a strategy of negotiation with the region's pro-Taliban militants (combined with longer-term economic and infrastructure development in the region), a tack that elicited scepticism in Western capitals and that has failed in its central purposes.

Separatist violence in India's Muslim-majority Jammu and Kashmir state has continued unabated since 1989, with some notable relative decline in recent years. India blames Pakistan for the infiltration of Islamic militants into Indian Kashmir, a charge Islamabad denies. The United States and India have received pledges from Islamabad that all "cross-border terrorism" would cease and that any terrorist facilities in Pakistani-controlled areas would be closed. The United States strongly encourages maintenance of a bilateral cease-fire and continued, substantive dialogue between Pakistan and India, which have fought three wars since 1947. A perceived Pakistan-India nuclear arms race has been the focus of U.S. nonproliferation efforts in South Asia. Attention to this issue intensified following nuclear tests by both countries in 1998. More recently, the United States has been troubled by evidence of the transfer of Pakistani nuclear technologies and materials to third parties, including North Korea, Iran, and Libya. Such evidence became stark in 2004.

Pakistan's macroeconomic indicators have turned positive since 2001, with some meaningful poverty reduction seen in this still poor country. President Bush seeks to expand U.S.-Pakistan trade and investment relations. Democracy has fared poorly in Pakistan; the country has endured direct military rule for more than half of its existence. In 1999, the elected government was ousted in a coup led by Army Chief General Pervez Musharraf, who later assumed the title of president. Supreme Court-ordered elections seated a new civilian government in 2002 (Musharraf ally and long-time finance minister Shaukat Aziz now serves as prime minister), but it remains weak, and Musharraf has retained his position as army chief. The United States urges restoration of full democracy, expecting Pakistan's planned early 2008 elections to be free, fair, and transparent. Congress has annually granted one-year presidential authority to waive coup-related aid sanctions. Pakistan is among the world's leading recipients of U.S. aid, obtaining about $4 billion in direct, overt U.S. assistance for FY2002-FY2007, including more than $1.6 billion in security-related aid. Pakistan also has since 2001 received more than $5 billion in reimbursements for its logistical support of U.S.-led counterterrorism operations.

Contents

Key Current Issues	1
Pakistan-Related Legislation and U.S.-Pakistan Diplomacy	1
Political Crises	2
President Musharraf's Reelection	5
Musharraf-Bhutto Engagement	6
Benazir Bhutto's Return	8
National Election Schedule and Credibility Concerns	8
The Red Mosque Siege and Islamist Retaliation	9
Al Qaeda in Pakistan	10
Conflict in Western Pakistan and the Afghan Insurgency	10
Setting and Regional Relations	13
Historical Setting	13
Current U.S.-Pakistan Engagement	15
Political Setting	15
Regional Relations	16
Pakistan-India Rivalry	16
The "IPI" Pipeline Project	18
Afghanistan	19
The China Factor	20
Pakistan-U.S. Relations and Key Country Issues	21
Terrorism	21
Al Qaeda in Pakistan	23
Infiltration Into Afghanistan	24
Infiltration into Kashmir and India	29
Domestic Terrorism	30
Other Security Issues	32
Pakistan-U.S. Security Cooperation	32
Nuclear Weapons and Missile Proliferation	34
U.S. Nonproliferation Efforts	36
Pakistan-India Tensions and the Kashmir Issue	37
Baluchistan Unrest	39
Narcotics	41
Islamization, Anti-American Sentiment, and Madrassas	41
Democratization and Human Rights	44
Democracy and Governance	44
Human Rights Problems	50
Economic Issues	52
Overview	52
Trade and Investment	54
U.S. Aid and Congressional Action	56
U.S. Assistance	56
Possible Adjustments to U.S. Assistance Programs	56
Proliferation-Related Legislation	58
Coups-Related Legislation	59
9/11 Commission Recommendations	59
Selected Pakistan-Related Legislation in the 110 th Congress	59

List of Figures

Pakistan in Brief	14
Figure 1. Map of Pakistan	63

List of Tables

Table 1. Direct Overt U.S. Assistance to Pakistan, FY2001-FY2008	62
--	----

Pakistan-U.S. Relations

A stable, democratic, prosperous Pakistan actively working to counter Islamist militancy is considered vital to U.S. interests. Current top-tier U.S. concerns regarding Pakistan include regional and global terrorism; Afghan stability; and domestic political stability and democratization. Pakistan remains a vital U.S. ally in U.S.-led anti-terrorism efforts. Yet the outcomes of U.S. policies toward Pakistan since 9/11, while not devoid of meaningful successes, have neither neutralized anti-Western militants and reduced religious extremism in that country, nor have they contributed sufficiently to the stabilization of neighboring Afghanistan. Many observers thus urge a broad re-evaluation of such policies. This is especially so in light of a months-old political crisis that has severely undermined the status of the military-dominated government of President General Pervez Musharraf and a surge in domestic Islamist militancy following the July denouement of a standoff involving Islamabad's Red Mosque complex. There are indications that anti-American sentiments remain widespread in Pakistan, and that a significant segment of the populace views U.S. support for the Musharraf government as being an impediment to, rather than facilitator of, the process of democratization there. To date, the Bush Administration publicly proclaims its ongoing strong support for Musharraf. However, in 2007 the Administration has shown signs of a shift in its long-standing policies toward Pakistan, in particular on the issues of democratization and on Islamabad's counterterrorism policies in western tribal areas.

Key Current Issues

Pakistan-Related Legislation and U.S.-Pakistan Diplomacy. On August 3, the Implementing the 9/11 Commission Recommendations Act of 2007 became P.L. 110-53. Section 2042 of the Act pertains specifically to U.S.-Pakistan relations and includes a provision to end U.S. military assistance and arms sales licensing to Pakistan in FY2008 unless the President determines that the Islamabad government is fully committed to and making progress in efforts to halt terrorist activity on Pakistani soil. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs issued a statement calling the section "disappointing" for Islamabad, saying its "unsubstantiated" allegations about an Al Qaeda presence in Pakistan and conditionalities on military aid to Pakistan "cast a shadow" on existing U.S.-Pakistan cooperation, creating linkages that "did not serve the interest of bilateral cooperation in the past and can prove to be detrimental in the future." President Musharraf called the provisions "an irritant in the bilateral relationship."¹ Other pending bills contain Pakistan-specific provisions, including further possible conditions on U.S. aid (see "Selected Pakistan-Related Legislation in the 110th Congress" section below). During an October 10

¹ See [http://www.mofa.gov.pk/Press_Releases/2007/july/PR_199_07.htm]; "Musharraf Dismayed at Pakistan Aid Condition," Reuters, August 7, 2007.

House Armed Services Committee hearing on Pakistan, a panel of four nongovernmental experts urged Washington to increase its engagement with Pakistan's civilian political forces and use its influence to promote free and fair elections there, while also counseling against the use of overt aid conditionality.²

On September 12, Deputy Secretary of State John Negroponte visited Islamabad for the second round of the Pakistan-U.S. Strategic Dialogue, where he called for peaceful democratic transition from military rule but refrained from any criticisms of a recent political crackdown and the deportation of former Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif. During their meeting, President Musharraf stressed the need for forward movement on President George W. Bush's Reconstruction Opportunity Zone initiative and U.S. support for Pakistan's Federally Administered Tribal Area (FATA) development plan, as well as assistance for building the capacity of the paramilitary Frontier Corps.³ On September 30, the United States and Pakistan inked a new plan to provide $750 million in U.S. aid to the FATA over the next five years.

Political Crises. President General Musharraf has in mid-2007 faced the worst political crisis since the October 1999 military coup. His array of woes includes a spate of lethal attacks by Islamist militants and a deteriorating internal security situation; a breakdown of truces made with pro-Taliban militants and a resurgence of low-intensity warfare in the country's tribal areas; an embarrassing July reversal at the Supreme Court and a newly independent-minded judiciary; electoral pressures due to upcoming constitutionally-mandated polls; simmering public anger; and plummeting approval ratings. Among ordinary Pakistanis, criticism of the army and its role in governance may be becoming more common.⁴ In September, Musharraf promoted a close ally, Lt. Gen. Nadeem Taj, to lead the country's influential Inter-Services Intelligence agency. Taj will replace Lt. Gen. Ashfaq Pervez Kiyani, a highly-regarded, pro-Western figure who has since been named as the new Vice Chief of Army Staff. Kiyani would thus succeed Musharraf in the powerful role of army chief should Musharraf resign from the post later this year as he has vowed to do following reelection to the presidency. Since assuming his new role, Kiyani has vowed press ahead with Pakistan army efforts to root out extremists from the tribal areas.⁵

A judicial crisis began with President Musharraf's summary March 9 dismissal of the country's Chief Justice, Iftikhar Chaudhry, on charges of nepotism and misconduct. Analysts widely believe the action was an attempt by Musharraf to remove a potential impediment to his continued roles as president and army chief, given Chaudhry's recent rulings that exhibited independence and went contrary to government expectations. The move triggered immediate outrage among Pakistani ² "U.S. Urged to Change Tack in Pakistan as Ally Falts," Reuters, October 10, 2007. Hearing statements at [http://www.house.gov/hasc/calendar_past_hearings.shtml].

³ Carlotta Gall, "U.S. Official in Pakistan for Talks," New York Times, September 12, 2007; [http://www.mofa.gov.pk/Press_Releases/2007/Sep/PR_238_07.htm].

⁴ Carlotta Gall and Somini Sengupta, "Pakistanis Express Ire at Army and Musharraf," New York Times, August 9, 2007.

⁵ "No Let-Up in War on Terror: Kiyani," News (Karachi), October 12, 2007.

lawyers; ensuing street protests by both opposition activists grew in scale. On July 20, in what was widely seen as a major political defeat for Musharraf, Pakistan's Supreme Court unanimously cleared Chaudhry of any wrongdoing and reinstated him to office. By providing an issue upon which anti-Musharraf sentiments could coalesce, the imbroglio morphed into a full-fledged political crisis and the greatest threat to Musharraf's government since it was established.

In August, President Musharraf reportedly came close to declaring a state of emergency, which would allow him to delay national elections for up to one year. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice telephoned Musharraf, by some accounts in a successful effort to dissuade him from imposing a state of emergency.⁶ Musharraf's political supporters in the ruling faction of the Pakistan Muslim League (PML-Q) are overseen by the influential "Chaudhrys of Gujarat" — Shujaat Hussain is party president and Pervaiz Elahi is Punjab's Chief Minister. As Musharraf's position has weakened, PML-Q members have become increasingly concerned about their own political fortunes. There have been signs that the PML-Q may fragment: several high-profile parliamentary defections have taken place and some analysts believe the party could "evaporate" upon Musharraf's further loss of public support.⁷ A key point of contention for the PML-Q is the opposition Pakistan People's Party's (PPP) demand that the president be stripped of his power to dissolve Parliament under Article 58(2)b of the constitution. The government has rejected this demand. Moreover, many of Musharraf's supporters resist removal of the bar on prime ministers serving a third term.⁸

August brought further indications that Pakistan's Supreme Court would not be subservient to military rule and could derail President Musharraf's political plans. Most significantly, on August 23 the court ruled that deposed Prime Minister Sharif could return to Pakistan after seven years in exile. When, on September 10, Sharif attempted to return to Lahore, the government immediately arrested him on corruption charges, then deported him only hours later. Sharif immediately appealed his deportation, which appeared to come in government defiance of the Supreme Court, and he may attempt another return before year's end. New York-based Human Rights Watch criticized the government for "flouting international law," calling Sharif's deportation "a direct affront to the Pakistani constitution."⁹ However, the U.S. State Department called the development "a matter for the Pakistanis to resolve," a position echoed by the White House.¹⁰ For many in ⁶ Carlotta Gall and Salman Masood, "Facing a Furor, Pakistan Rejects Emergency Rule," New York Times, August 9, 2007.

⁷ Kim Barker, "Political Pitch: Time to Switch," Chicago Tribune, September 7, 2007.

⁸ "Chaudhrys Upset Over Benazir-Musharraf Talks," News (Karachi), August 29, 2007; Sharif Khan and Rana Qaisar, "Musharraf-BB Talks Stall," Daily Times (Lahore), August 31, 2007.

⁹ See [<http://hrw.org/english/docs/2007/09/10/pakist16832.htm>].

¹⁰ See [<http://www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/dpb/2007/sep/91940.htm>]; "White House Calls Sharif Exile 'Internal Matter,'" Agence France Presse, September 10, 2007.

Pakistan, the government's abrupt move was seen as evidence of weakness and insecurity, and may have further damaged Musharraf's standing.¹¹

In late September, the Islamabad government arrested hundreds of opposition political leaders and activists, many of them deputies of Nawaz Sharif, including some sitting members of Parliament. A statement issued by the U.S. Embassy called the development "extremely disturbing and confusing," and Secretary of State Rice later called the arrests "troubling."¹² On September 27, Pakistan's Chief Justice ordered the release of these political detainees, but Islamabad witnessed street violence in the days immediately following the Supreme Court's September 28 dismissal of petitions filed to oppose President Musharraf's reelection plans when hundreds of angry protestors clashed with riot police. One report claimed more than 100 journalists and lawyers sustained serious injuries in the melee and Pakistan's Chief Justice later ordered that Islamabad's police chief and two other senior officials be suspended for an alleged overreaction. Some analysts believe the government crackdown on the political opposition undercuts Musharraf's claims to be a pro-democracy reformer.¹³ Meanwhile, U.S. intelligence officials reportedly are alarmed by signs that political turmoil in Pakistan is leading the Musharraf government to scale back its counterterrorism efforts in western tribal regions and that Musharraf himself has become so politically weakened that the conditions allowing a resurgence of religious militancy in Pakistan are likely to persist and perhaps worsen.¹⁴ (See also "Democracy and Governance" section below.)

Moreover, the Islamist Muttahida Majlis-e-Amal (MMA) coalition, weakened over a period of years by the increasingly divergent approaches taken by its two main figures — Jamaat-e-Islami (JI) chief Qazi Hussain Ahmed, a vehement critic of the military-led government, and Jamiat Ulema-e-Pakistan chief Fazl ur-Rehman, who largely has accommodated the Musharraf regime — may be near a split: on October

¹¹ Mian Ridge, "Deporting Sharif May Weaken Pakistan's President Musharraf," Christian Science Monitor, September 11, 2007. A public opinion survey conducted in early September by the U.S.-based International Republican Institute found that Musharraf's approval rating had dropped to an all-time low of 21%, down from 63% only one year earlier. Meanwhile, Sharif's star rose at the time leading up to his aborted attempt at returning to Pakistan: in the IRI survey he bested both Musharraf and Bhutto in the category of "best leader for Pakistan," with an outright majority of Punjabis assigning him that title. The poll also found that economic issues are key for the great majority of respondents, and that a majority disapprove of the performance of the current government and do not believe it should be reelected (see [<http://www.iri.org/mena/pakistan/pdfs/2007-10-11-pakistan-Index.pdf>]).

¹² See [<http://usembassy.state.gov/pakistan/h07092402.html>]; "Rice Says Arrests of Pakistani Opposition Troubling," Reuters, September 24, 2007.

¹³ "A Reign of Terror in Islamabad," News (Karachi), September 30, 2007. "Crackdown Hurts Pakistan Leader Image," Associated Press, September 30, 2007.

¹⁴ Greg Miller, "Pakistan Backs Off Al Qaeda Pursuit," Los Angeles Times, September 23, 2007; Carlotta Gall, "Political Paralysis Lets Pakistan Militants Thrive," New York Times, October 10, 2007.

22, the JI and allied parties may ask Rehman to end his support for Musharraf or leave the alliance.¹⁵

President Musharraf's Reelection. On October 6, President Musharraf won reelection when he captured 98% of the votes cast by Pakistan's 1,170-member Electoral College. About 57% of the total possible vote from the membership of all national and provincial legislatures went to Musharraf; two-fifths of the body had either resigned in protest (mostly members of the Islamist MMA coalition) or abstained (members of the PPP). A White House spokesman congratulated "important partner and ally" Pakistan for holding the election.¹⁶ Although the exercise gave him a much-needed boost, Musharraf's political troubles are far from ended, and many analysts see him relegated to a permanently diminished status. Musharraf has vowed to resign his military commission following reelection, but he will become even more politically vulnerable as a civilian president. At the same time, the inability of political opposition forces to mount any meaningful agitation against the election demonstrated their disunity and weakness.¹⁷

Controversy had arisen over Musharraf's intention to seek reelection by the current assemblies — which are considered more favorable to his continued rule than assemblies elected in 2008 might be — as well as his intention to run while still serving as army chief (2002 and 2005 rulings have allowed for his dual-role until November 15). Opposition parties believe such moves to be unconstitutional and they petitioned the Supreme Court to block this course. On October 5, that court ruled the election could take place as scheduled but that official results would be withheld until after the court rules on such legal challenges (the court resumed its hearings on October 17). While few observers predict the court will void the result, the ruling has to some degree left Musharraf in political limbo — he is not expected to doff his army uniform until his reelection is confirmed. Some analysts fear that a state of emergency would be declared were the court to rule against Musharraf.

Prior to the presidential election, one Islamabad-based non-profit group concluded that "a majority of indicators tend to negatively affect the prospects of free and fair presidential election," noting that while a generally free media and newly independent-minded Supreme Court represented hopeful signs, Musharraf's candidacy while in uniform, his government's mass arrest of opposition leaders and defiance of the apex court's ruling on Nawaz Sharif, and the Election Commission's changing of election rules to benefit Musharraf all suggested a tainted process.¹⁸

¹⁵ Azaz Syed, "MMA on Verge of Spilt," Daily Times (Lahore), October 14, 2007.

¹⁶ "US Cautiously Congratulates Pakistan After Vote," Agence France Presse, October 6, 2007.

¹⁷ Laura King, "A New Term is Unlikely to End Musharraf's Troubles," Los Angeles Times, October 5, 2007; Hasan-Askari Rizvi, "Excluding the Military," Daily Times (Lahore), October 14, 2007.

¹⁸ Pakistan Institute of Legislative Development and Transparency, Election Monitor 1, September 24, 2007, and Election Monitor 3, October 9, 2007.

Musharraf-Bhutto Engagement. President Musharraf and former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto (leader of the PPP) reportedly have been negotiating a power-sharing arrangement that would facilitate Musharraf's continued national political role while also allowing Bhutto to return to Pakistan from self-imposed exile and potentially serve as prime minister a third time. The Bush Administration reportedly is quietly encouraging such an arrangement as the best means of both sustaining Musharraf's role and of strengthening moderate political forces in Islamabad.¹⁹ Already the Musharraf government appears to have benefitted through the mere act of negotiating with Bhutto, as the process has driven a wedge between the PPP and the rest of the country's political opposition (Nawaz Sharif's PML-N faction and the Islamist MMA coalition both refuse to engage in such a dialogue).

In negotiations with the Musharraf government, Bhutto has focused on five key points: 1) restoration of the 1973 Constitution minus the 17th Amendment (to restore a "balance of power" established between the presidency and Parliament); 2) establishment of an independent Election Commission; 3) release of all political prisoners; 4) free, fair, and transparent elections with a level playing field for all contenders; and 5) Musharraf's resignation from the army. She also insists on the repeal of a 2003 constitutional amendment banning twice-elected prime ministers from serving again and the removal of all standing corruption charges against herself and other ex-officials.²⁰ Some analysts take a cynical view of Bhutto's motives in negotiating with Musharraf, believing her central goal is removal of standing corruption cases against her.²¹ Bhutto insists that she has not sought a "power-sharing" arrangement with Musharraf but has engaged his regime so as to facilitate "an effective and peaceful transition to democracy."²²

According to one senior Pakistani political analyst, the credibility of the Musharraf government has been so damaged in 2007 that a deal with the PPP is unlikely to redeem it.²³ A July report from a Brussels-based think-tank concluded that President Musharraf has little choice but to continue his reliance on Islamist parties for political support and it considers a Musharraf-PPP power-sharing arrangement to be untenable given their mutual animosity and the increasing strength of the country's pro-democracy movement. It thus foresees either a peaceful and orderly power transition through free and fair elections or violence and instability through an effort by Musharraf and the army high command to cling to power.²⁴ At ¹⁹ Mark Mazetti, "U.S. Prods Musharraf to Share Power," New York Times, August 16, 2007.

²⁰ "Bhutto Lays Down Pakistan Terms," BBC News, July 30, 2007; Benazir Bhutto (interview), "Transcript: CNN With Wolf Blitzer," August 5, 2007; "PPP-Govt Deal Focused on Four Points," News (Karachi), August 24, 2007; Benazir Bhutto (interview), "Transcript: PBS The NewsHour With Jim Lehrer," August 21, 2007.

²¹ See, for example, Ijaz Hussain, "Deal-ing a Bad Hand," Daily Times (Lahore), August 29, 2007.

²² Harlan Ullman, "Exclusive Bhutto Interview," Washington Times, October 17, 2007.

²³ Hasan-Askari Rizvi, "Table For Two?," Daily Times (Lahore), July 29, 2007.

²⁴ "Elections, Democracy and Stability in Pakistan," International Crisis Group Asia Report (continued...)

least one senior Washington-based analyst is convinced that, even if an accord is reached with Bhutto, Musharraf's record suggests that he will continue to maintain a tacit alliance with the country's religious parties and will continue to use the government's security apparatus to constrain the activities of mainstream political groups. Another predicts that Musharraf's political survival depends on further constraining his opponents' political space and that Islamabad's future regime is likely to be even more autocratic.²⁵

On October 4, President Musharraf and Bhutto agreed to an accord that would pave the way for a power-sharing deal. The National Reconciliation Ordinance (NRO) would provide amnesty for all politicians who served in Pakistan between 1988 and 1999, thus essentially clearing Bhutto of standing and potential corruption charges. Officials said the amnesty would not apply to former Prime Minister Sharif. In return, Bhutto reportedly agreed to withdraw her party's petitions with the Supreme Court that sought to block Musharraf's reelection plans and to refrain from a threatened mass parliamentary resignation of PPP members.²⁶ Many Pakistanis were unhappy with news of the deal. The Human Rights Commission of Pakistan, for example, opposes the NRO as "ill-conceived opportunism" and a measure "designed to promote violent crime and corruption." Another commentator denounced the ordinance as "a devious deal between two power-hungry people" and "a flagrant violation of principled politics."²⁷ The Supreme Court subsequently put a spanner in Bhutto's plans by ruling on October 12 that it would hear challenges to the NRO, thus threatening a Musharraf-Bhutto deal by potentially reinstating corruption charges against the former prime minister.

Meanwhile, Pakistanis appear increasingly put off by a seemingly arbitrary electoral process that serves to preserve the power of a corrupt elite who are seen to give little substantive attention to the problems of ordinary citizens.²⁸ Moreover, there has been considerable dismay among Pakistanis at the appearance of unabashed U.S. interference in their political system, even to the extent of "bypassing the prime minister and his cabinet to ensure smooth sailing" for Bhutto.²⁹ One former State Department official has contended that, through a deep U.S. involvement in efforts to bring about a Musharraf-Bhutto understanding, "We have set ourselves up to be blamed for all the shortcomings of Pakistan's government — and have set the stage

²⁴ (...continued)

No. 137, July 31, 2007, at [<http://www.crisisgroup.org/home/index.cfm?id=4969&l=1>].

²⁵ Teresita Schaffer, "Not the Same Pakistan," CSIS Commentary, September 18, 2007; William Milam, "Musharraf: A Transition Figure?," Friday Times (Lahore), September 28, 2007.

²⁶ "Pakistan's Bhutto, Musharraf Agree on Accord," Agence France Presse, October 4, 2007.

²⁷ HRCP Press Release, October 10, 2007; Burhanuddin Hasan, "Death of Accountability," News (Karachi), October 11, 2007.

²⁸ Sadaqat Jan, "Pakistanis Says They're Cynical of Election Marred by Boycotts and Legal Challenges," Associated Press, October 6, 2007; Mark Sappenfield, "New Political Deal Angers Pakistanis," Christian Science Monitor, October 9, 2007.

²⁹ "US Involved in Pak Politics to the Hilt," News (Karachi), October 11, 2007.

for a successor government to use anti-Americanism as a rallying cry”³⁰ Whether or not this comes to pass, it is far from clear if the two long-time antagonists will be able to create an effective working relationship, and the central U.S. policy goal of strengthening Islamabad’s role as an ally in counterterrorism efforts is unlikely to be met in the short-term as Pakistan faces months of political uncertainty.³¹ (See also “Democracy and Governance” section below.)

Benazir Bhutto’s Return. On October 18, former Prime Minister Bhutto made good on her promise to return to Pakistan after more than eight years of self-imposed exile and was welcomed in Karachi by up to one million supporters. (Hours later, two bomb blasts near her motorcade — likely perpetrated by suicide attackers — left at least 115 people dead, but Bhutto was unharmed.)³² While Bhutto continues to enjoy significant public support in the country, especially in her home region of rural Sindh, there are signs that many PPP members are ambivalent about her return and worry that her credibility as an opponent of military rule has been damaged through deal-making with Musharraf.³³ Pakistani government officials have warned that Bhutto could be subject to arrest if the Supreme Court upholds legal challenges to the NRO. In the days leading up to her slated return, they repeatedly urged her to postpone the date until after the Supreme Court had ruled on the legality of both the president’s reelection and of the NRO. Bhutto claims that it is the PML-Q leadership — and not President Musharraf — that was made anxious by her return to the country. Bhutto is expected to run for a parliamentary seat in January and potentially serve for a third time as prime minister.

National Election Schedule and Credibility Concerns. Pakistan’s next parliamentary and provincial elections must take place by mid-February 2008, or within 90 days of the mid-November 2007 end of the current bodies’ terms (Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz has stated that the polls will take place during the first two weeks of January 2008; after dissolution of the present assemblies, President Musharraf reportedly plans to appoint a caretaker government to oversee elections). Some observers see signs that the government does not intend to conduct credible elections. Such signs prominently include controversy surrounding the possible disenfranchisement of scores of millions of Pakistanis from voter rolls. In the words of one commentator, “Preparing trustworthy voters’ lists was the first major test of the current Election Commission’s ability to hold credible polls. The Commission

³⁰ Statement of Ambassador Teresita Schaffer before the House Armed Services Committee, October 10, 2007.

³¹ Peter Wonacott and Zahid Hussain, “For Pakistan, A Tenuous Accord,” Wall Street Journal, October 5, 2007; Robin Wright and Griff Witte, “Pakistan Election Poses Challenges for U.S.,” Washington Post, October 6, 2007.

³² Bhutto has alleged that some pro-jihadist retired Pakistani military officers have plotted her assassination, and Baitullah Mehsud, a pro-Taliban militant commander in South Waziristan, vowed to launch suicide attacks against her. The government deployed thousands of security troops to safeguard her Karachi arrival (Zahid Hussain, “Triumph or Tumult for Bhutto?,” Wall Street Journal Asia, October 18, 2007).

³³ Kim Barker, “Exile Faces an Uneasy Welcome,” Chicago Tribune, October 15, 2007; “Bhutto Returning Defiant But Compromised,” Associated Press, October 16, 2007.

has clearly failed that test.”³⁴ The U.S. government has provided millions of dollars in democracy-related aid funds to Pakistan, much of these going toward a Commission effort to computerize the country’s voter rolls. Washington also plans to sponsor election observation programs in support of the parliamentary elections. (See also “Democracy and Governance” section below.)

The Red Mosque Siege and Islamist Retaliation. On July 10, a week-long siege at Islamabad’s Red Mosque ended when Pakistani commandos stormed the complex and, following a 20-hour battle, defeated the well-armed Islamist radicals therein. Beginning in January and escalating steadily over the course of the year, an open Islamist rebellion of sorts had been taking place in Pakistan’s relatively serene capital. Radical Islamists at the Red Mosque and their followers in the attached women’s Jamia Hafsa seminary had occupied illegally constructed religious buildings, kidnaped and detained local police officers and alleged Chinese prostitutes, battled security forces, and threatened to launch a violent anti-government campaign unless Sharia (Islamic law) was instituted nationwide. Several thousand people had been barricaded in the mosque complex, reportedly including a small number of foreign militants. Government efforts to negotiate with the mosque’s clerics made no progress and were viewed by many Pakistanis as appeasement of the Islamists. Some cynics in Pakistan suggested that the government was complicit in allowing the standoff to fester, its alleged slow and uncertain response being a purposeful effort to bolster its own standing as a bulwark against spreading Islamist radicalism.

As street battles escalated, commandos laid siege to the mosque complex in early July. On July 4, one of the two radical cleric leaders, Mohammed Abdul Aziz, was captured as he tried to escape disguised as a woman. On July 10, with negotiations appearing to fail conclusively, commandos launched a full-scale, pre-dawn assault on the complex. The mosque’s remaining top cleric, Mohammed’s younger brother Abdur Rashid Ghazi, was killed in the heavy fighting, which left more than 100 people dead, including approximately 10 security troops, 60 militants, and an unknown number of civilians, among them women and children.

The Red Mosque denouement elicited a rapid and fierce backlash among Pakistani Islamists sympathetic to the radicals’ cause: up to 200 people, most of them soldiers and police recruits, were killed in more than one dozen suicide bombings in western Pakistan in the two weeks following the commando assault. Sporadic and lethal militant attacks have continued. By one accounting, 396 people have been killed in 36 suicide bombing incidents in Pakistan during the first nine months of 2007, most of them soldiers and policemen, with the great majority of deaths coming after the July 3 start of the Red Mosque siege. Another source claims there have been more than 1,000 people killed in violence related to Islamist militancy in Pakistan since the Red Mosque raid, including a reported 570 militants, 200 civilians, and 290 security personnel.³⁵ Moreover, upon reopening, the Red Mosque has continued to be a gathering place for strongly anti-Musharraf and anti-³⁴ Farahnaz Ispahani, “A Credible Election,” News (Karachi), August 20, 2007.

³⁵ Amir Mir, “Who is the Enemy?,” Outlook (Delhi), October 1, 2007; “Violence Has Pakistanis Debating US Tie,” Associated Press, October 10, 2007.

Western Islamist figures. By one account, the mosque is now “a memorial, a rallying cry, and a propaganda tool” for radical religious groups, thus enlarging the pool of potential terrorist recruits.³⁶

Al Qaeda in Pakistan. U.S. officials are increasingly concerned that Al Qaeda and other anti-Western terrorists remain active on Pakistani territory. Such concern surged following the July release of an unclassified version of a new National Intelligence Estimate on terrorist threats to the U.S. homeland, which concluded that Al Qaeda “has protected or regenerated key elements of its Homeland attack capability, including: a safehaven in the FATA, operational lieutenants, and its top leadership.”³⁷ Pakistan’s Ambassador to the United States, Mahmoud Ali Durrani, later claimed that U.S. intelligence reporting on Al Qaeda in Pakistan was “absolutely incorrect” and that there were no Al Qaeda safehavens on Pakistani territory.³⁸ On September 20, Al Qaeda founder Osama bin Laden released an audio tape in which he urged Muslims in Pakistan to rise up against President Musharraf to avenge his “aid to America against the Muslims” and the Pakistani army’s July raid on Islamabad’s Red Mosque.³⁹ As of mid-October 2007, Pakistani and Western security officials reportedly see Islamabad losing its war against religious militancy and Al Qaeda forces enjoying growing areas in which to operate, due in large part to the Pakistan army’s poor counterinsurgency capabilities and the central government’s steadily eroding legitimacy.⁴⁰

Conflict in Western Pakistan and the Afghan Insurgency. An ongoing Taliban insurgency in Afghanistan and its connection to developments in Pakistan remain matters of serious concern, especially in light of signs that Al Qaeda terrorists move with impunity on the Pakistani side of the rugged border. In July, pro-Taliban militants in North Waziristan announced their withdrawal from a controversial September 2006 truce made with the Islamabad government, claiming the accord had been violated by army deployments and attacks on tribals. Simultaneously, U.S. National Security Advisor Stephen Hadley stated that Washington had determined President Musharraf’s policies in the region to be ineffective and he said the United States was fully supporting new efforts to crack down on Pakistan’s pro-Taliban militants. Later in July, the U.S. commander of counterterrorism operations in Afghanistan, Maj. Gen. David Rodriguez, blamed a growing Al Qaeda presence in ³⁶ Griff Witte, “Pakistan’s Embattled Mosque Reopens With Fresh Momentum,” Washington Post, October 14, 2007.

³⁷ See [http://www.dni.gov/press_releases/20070717_release.pdf]. A Pakistan Foreign Ministry statement criticized the document’s “unsubstantiated assertions.”

³⁸ Michael Hirsh and Ron Moreau, “State of Anxiety,” Newsweek, August 27, 2007.

³⁹ “Bin Laden, on Tape, Urges Pakistanis to Oust Musharraf,” New York Times, September 21, 2007.

⁴⁰ Griff Witte, “Pakistan Seen Losing Fight Against Taliban and Al Qaeda,” Washington Post, October 3, 2007.

Pakistan for an estimated 50-60% increase in the number of foreign fighters infiltrating into Afghanistan.⁴¹

According to a September 2007 U.N. report on the incidence of suicide bombing in Afghanistan, “Pakistan remains an important source of human and material assistance for the insurgency generally but suicide attacks in particular.” The report found that nearly all suicide attackers in Afghanistan undergo some form of training and preparation in Pakistani madrassas, and that more than 80% “pass through recruitment, training facilities or safe houses in North or South Waziristan en route to their targets inside Afghanistan.” Pakistan’s Foreign Ministry countered that the “irresponsible” report was “based on sources known to be habitually critical of Pakistan’s policies.”⁴²

The Pakistan army now reportedly has deployed nearly 100,000 troops in western Pakistan in response to the surge in militancy there. Battles with pro-Taliban militants are ongoing and became particularly fierce in North Waziristan in mid-October, when a days-long battle near the town of Mir Ali left a reported 250 people, including 60 soldiers and up to 60 civilians, dead. An army spokesman claimed that 50 foreign fighters, mostly Uzbeks and Tajiks, were among those killed. The army also is suffering from a raft of recent suicide bomb attacks and the kidnapping of hundreds of its soldiers.⁴³ Such setbacks have damaged the army’s morale, and also have caused some to question the organization’s loyalties and capabilities.⁴⁴ Meanwhile, Islamist militants from the tribal agencies are continuing to spread their influence to Pakistan’s “settled areas,” including NWFP districts such as Malakand, Dir, and Swat. The militants also appear to be employing heavy weapons in more aggressive tactics, making frontal attacks on army outposts instead of the hit-and-run skirmishes of the past.⁴⁵

In other developments:

⁴¹ “Pakistan Army Action Has Slight Effect: U.S. General,” Reuters, July 25, 2007.

⁴² U.N. Assistance Mission in Afghanistan, “Suicide Attacks in Afghanistan (2001-2007),” September 9, 2007; [http://www.mofa.gov.pk/Press_Releases/2007/Sep/PR_240_07.htm].

⁴³ In the most egregious example of the latter development, on August 30 some 250 Pakistani soldiers, including a colonel and 8 other officers, were taken prisoner when pro-Taliban militants ambushed their convoy in South Waziristan. The troops apparently offered no resistance before surrendering to Islamist extremists reportedly loyal to fugitive commander Baitullah Mahsud, who is suspected of ordering numerous suicide bomb attacks against military targets in recent months. The militants demanded that the military withdraw from South Waziristan. President Musharraf later criticized the troops for taking insufficient precautionary measures (Ismail Khan and Carlotta Gall, “Pakistani Militants Hold Army Troops Hostage,” New York Times, September 4, 2007; Owen Bennett Jones, “Musharraf Blames Captured Troops,” BBC News, October 12, 2007).

⁴⁴ Jeremy Page and Zahid Hussain, “Kidnapings and Suicide Attacks Shake Morale of Pakistan’s Armed Force,” Times of London, September 20, 2007.

⁴⁵ Laura King, “Battles Raging in Remotest Pakistan,” Los Angeles Times, August 13, 2007.

- On October 18, two bomb blasts — likely perpetrated by suicide attackers — left at least 115 people dead near the motorcade of returning former Prime Minister Bhutto, who was unharmed
- Also on October 18, Pakistan and India held talks on conventional confidence-building measures..
- On October 10, the House Armed Services Committee held a hearing on Pakistan.
- On October 8, the main index of the Karachi Stock Exchange hit a record high as analysts speculated that business interests favor President Musharraf's continued rule.
- October 1, a suicide bomber killed at least 15 people, including 4 police officers, at a police checkpoint in Bannu, NWFP.
- On September 30, the United States and Pakistan inked a new plan to provide $750 million in U.S. aid to the FATA over five years.
- On September 14, the U.S. Department of State's International Religious Freedom Report 2007 again found that the Islamabad government imposes limits on the freedom of religion in Pakistan.
- On September 13, at least 15 Pakistani soldiers were killed in a suicide bomb attack on an army building in the North West Frontier Province (NWFP) outside Islamabad.
- On September 11, at least 16 people, including 2 policemen and a soldier, were killed in a suicide bomb attack near a security checkpoint in Dera Ismail Khan in the NWFP.
- On September 4, at least 25 people were killed and another 70 injured in two suicide bomb attacks in Rawalpindi. Many of the victims were employees of Pakistan's security agencies.
- On September 1, seven people, including three paramilitary soldiers, were killed in two suicide car bombings in the Bajaur tribal agency.
- On August 31, two-day talks between Indian and Pakistani officials seeking to resolve a water dispute over the Wullar Barrage/Tubal navigation project ended in deadlock.
- On August 24, two suicide bomb attacks left six Pakistani soldiers dead in North Waziristan. In response, Pakistani helicopter gunships attacked suspected Islamist militant positions in the region, reportedly killing up to 15.

- On August 14, Pakistan celebrated its 60th independence day.
- On August 6, U.S. Trade Representative Schwab hosted Commerce Minister Khan in Washington, where they reportedly discussed proposed Reconstruction Opportunity Zones, as well as efforts to finalize a Bilateral Investment Treaty.
- On August 1, Pakistan and India ended two-day talks on economic and commercial cooperation with agreements to facilitate importation of cement from Pakistan and tea from India, among others.
- On July 27, a suicide bomber killed at least 13 people, most of them police, near Islamabad's Red Mosque complex.
- On July 25, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee held a hearing on Pakistan.
- On July 19, three separate suicide bomb attacks killed at least 52 people. The worst attack involved the car bombing of a vehicle carrying Chinese workers near Karachi. The Chinese were unhurt, but 7 police escorts and 23 bystanders died.

Setting and Regional Relations

Historical Setting

The long and checkered Pakistan-U.S. relationship has its roots in the Cold War and South Asia regional politics of the 1950s. U.S. concerns about Soviet expansionism and Pakistan's desire for security assistance against a perceived threat from India prompted the two countries to negotiate a mutual defense assistance agreement in 1954. By 1955, Pakistan had further aligned itself with the West by joining two regional defense pacts, the South East Asia Treaty Organization and the Central Treaty Organization (or "Baghdad Pact"). As a result of these alliances, Islamabad received nearly $2 billion in U.S. assistance from 1953 to 1961, one-quarter of this in military aid, making Pakistan one of America's most important security assistance partners of the period. President Dwight D. Eisenhower famously called Pakistan America's "most allied ally in Asia." Differing expectations of the security relationship long bedeviled bilateral ties, however. During and immediately after the Indo-Pakistani wars of 1965 and 1971, the United States suspended military assistance to both sides, resulting in a cooling of the Pakistan-U.S. relationship and a perception among many in Pakistan that the United States was not a reliable ally.

In the mid-1970s, new strains arose over Pakistan's efforts to respond to India's 1974 underground nuclear test by seeking its own nuclear weapons capability. U.S. aid was suspended by President Carter in 1979 in response to Pakistan's covert construction of a uranium enrichment facility. However, following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan later that year, Pakistan again was viewed as a frontline ally in the effort to block Soviet expansionism. In 1981, the Reagan Administration offered Islamabad a five-year, $3.2 billion aid package. Pakistan became a key transit country for arms supplies to the Afghan resistance, as well as home for some three million Afghan refugees, most of whom have yet to return.

Despite this renewal of U.S. aid and close security ties, many in Congress remained troubled by Pakistan's nuclear weapons program. In 1985, Section 620E(e) (the Pressler amendment) was added to the Foreign Assistance Act, requiring the President to certify to Congress that Pakistan does not possess a nuclear explosive device during the fiscal year for which aid is to be provided. With the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, Pakistan's nuclear activities again came under intensive U.S. scrutiny and, in 1990, President George H.W. Bush again suspended aid to Pakistan. Under the provisions of the Pressler amendment, most bilateral economic and all military aid ended, and deliveries of major military equipment ceased. In 1992, Congress partially relaxed the scope of sanctions to allow for food assistance and continuing support for nongovernmental organizations. Among the notable results of the aid cutoff was the nondelivery of F-16 fighter aircraft purchased by Pakistan in 1989. Nine years later, the United States agreed to compensate Pakistan with a $325 million cash payment and $140 million in goods, including surplus wheat, but the episode engendered lingering Pakistani resentments.

During the 1990s, with U.S. attention shifted away from the region, Islamabad further consolidated its nuclear weapons capability, fanned the flames of a growing separatist insurgency in neighboring Indian-controlled Kashmir, and nurtured the Taliban movement in Afghanistan, where the radical Islamist group took control of Kabul in 1996. After more than a decade of alienation, U.S. relations with Pakistan were once again transformed in dramatic fashion, this time by the September 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States and the ensuing enlistment of Pakistan as a pivotal ally in U.S.-led counterterrorism efforts. A small trickle of foreign assistance to Pakistan again became a prodigious flow and, in a sign of renewed U.S. recognition of the country's importance, President George W. Bush designated Pakistan as a major non-NATO ally of the United States in June 2004. One month later, a Congressional Pakistan Caucus was formed to facilitate dialogue among

Pakistan in Brief

Population: 165 million; growth rate: 1.8% (2007 est.)

Area: 803,940 sq. km. (slightly less than twice the size of California)

Capital: Islamabad

Head of Government: President and Chief of Army Staff General Pervez Musharraf

Ethnic Groups: Punjabi, Sindhi, Pashtun, Baloch, Muhajir (immigrants from India at the time of partition and their descendants)

Languages: Punjabi 58%, Sindhi 12%, Pashtu 8%, Urdu 8%; English widely used

Religions: Muslim 96% (Sunni 81%, Shia 15%), Christian, Hindu, and other 4%

Life Expectancy at Birth: female 65 years; male 63 years (2007 est.)

Literacy: female 35%; male 62% (2004 est.)

Gross Domestic Product (at PPP): $412 billion; per capita: $2,580; growth rate 6.2% (2006)

Currency: Rupee (100 = $1.65)

Inflation: 7.9% (2006)

Military Expenditures: $4.0 billion (3.6% of GDP; 2005)

U.S. Trade: exports to U.S. $3.67 billion; imports from U.S. $2 billion (2006)

Sources: CIA, The World Factbook; Departments of Commerce and State; Government of Pakistan; Economist Intelligence Unit; Global Insight; Military Balance

Pakistani-Americans and their political representatives in Congress, and to improve and strengthen bilateral relations between Pakistan and the United States.

Current U.S.-Pakistan Engagement

U.S. engagement with Pakistan continues to be deep and multifaceted. President Bush traveled to Pakistan in March 2006 for the first such presidential visit in six years, and numerous high-level governmental meetings have ensued. During the visit, President Bush and President Pervez Musharraf issued a Joint Statement on the U.S.-Pakistan “strategic partnership” that calls for a “strategic dialogue” and “significant expansion” of bilateral economic ties, including mutual trade and investment, as well as initiatives in the areas of energy, peace and security, social sector development, science and technology, democracy, and nonproliferation.⁴⁶ In the wake of that meeting, diplomatic engagements have continued apace. Over the past year, visits to Islamabad have been made by Secretary of State Rice, Vice President Dick Cheney, Secretary of Defense Robert Gates, Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi, and several top U.S. military commanders, among others. Pakistani visitors to Washington in the past year have included President Musharraf, Foreign Minister Kurshid Kasuri, Foreign Secretary Riaz Khan, and the then-Chairman of Pakistan’s Joint Chiefs of Staff Committee, General Ehsan ul-Haq. Among formal sessions were a November 2006 meeting of the U.S.-Pakistan Education Dialogue hosted by Education Secretary Margaret Spellings in Washington; a February 2007 meeting of the U.S.-Pakistan Joint Committee on Science and Technology in Washington; and a September meeting of the U.S.-Pakistan Strategic Dialogue in Islamabad, where the U.S. delegation was led by Deputy Secretary of State Negroponte.

Political Setting

Pakistan’s political history is a troubled one, marked by tripartite power struggles among presidents, prime ministers, and army chiefs. Military regimes have ruled Pakistan for more than half of its 60 years of existence, interspersed with periods of generally weak civilian governance. From 1988 to 1999, Islamabad had democratically elected governments, and the army appeared to have moved from its traditional role of “kingmaker” to one of power broker. Benazir Bhutto (leader of the Pakistan People’s Party) and Nawaz Sharif (leader of the Pakistan Muslim League) each served twice as prime minister during this period. The Bhutto government was dismissed on charges of corruption and nepotism in 1996 and Sharif won a landslide victory in ensuing elections, which were judged generally free and fair by international observers. Sharif moved quickly to bolster his powers by curtailing those of the president and judiciary, and he emerged as one of Pakistan’s strongest-ever elected leaders. Critics accused him of intimidating the opposition and the press.

In October 1999, in proximate response to Prime Minister Sharif’s attempt to remove him, Chief of Army Staff General Musharraf overthrew the government, dismissed the National Assembly, and appointed himself “chief executive.” In the wake of this military overthrow of the elected government, Islamabad faced considerable international opprobrium and was subjected to automatic coup-related U.S. sanctions under section 508 of the annual foreign assistance appropriations act (Pakistan was already under nuclear-related U.S. sanctions). Musharraf later assumed the title of president following a controversial April 2002 referendum. National elections were held in October of that year, as ordered by the Supreme Court. A new civilian government was seated — Prime Minister M.Z. Jamali was replaced with Musharraf ally Shaukat Aziz in August 2005 — but it has remained weak. In apparent contravention of democratic norms, Musharraf has continued to hold the dual offices of president and army chief. Many figures across the spectrum of Pakistani society welcomed Musharraf, or at least were willing to give him the benefit of the doubt, as a potential reformer who would curtail both corruption and the influence of religious extremists. Yet his domestic popularity has suffered following indications that, as with Pakistan's previous president-generals, expanding his own power and that of the military would be his central goal.

⁴⁶ See [<http://usembassy.state.gov/pakistan/h06030404.html>].

Pakistan's next parliamentary elections must take place by mid-February 2008, or within 90 days of the mid-November 2007 end of the current body's term. President Bush has said that electoral process will be "an important test of Pakistan's commitment to democratic reform" and, during his 2006 visit to Islamabad, said President Musharraf understands the elections "need to be open and honest."⁴⁷ In October 2007, Secretary of State Rice repeated the admonition, saying the expected parliamentary elections will be "a real test" of the Islamabad government's commitment to democratization and that the U.S. government is "pressing that case very hard."⁴⁸ Musharraf himself stood for (and unofficially won) reelection as president on October 6, 2007. Under the Pakistani system, the president is indirectly elected by a 1,170-person electoral college comprised of the membership of all national and provincial legislatures. Opposition parties have petitioned the Supreme Court to annul the exercise: Under Pakistan's 1973 Constitution, Musharraf ostensibly is barred from both seeking reelection and from simultaneously serving as president and army chief.⁴⁹ (See "Democracy and Governance" section below. See also CRS Report RL32615, Pakistan's Domestic Political Developments.)

Regional Relations

Pakistan-India Rivalry. Three full-scale wars — in 1947-1948, 1965, and 1971 — and a constant state of military preparedness on both sides of their mutual border have marked six decades of bitter rivalry between Pakistan and India. The acrimonious partition of British India into two successor states in 1947 and the unresolved issue of Kashmiri sovereignty have been major sources of tension. Both countries have built large defense establishments at significant cost to economic and social development. The Kashmir problem is rooted in claims by both countries to the former princely state, divided since 1948 by a military Line of Control (LOC) into the Indian state of Jammu and Kashmir and Pakistan-held Azad [Free] Kashmir. India blames Pakistan for supporting a violent separatist rebellion in the Muslim-dominated Kashmir Valley that has taken as many as 66,000 lives since 1989. Pakistan admits only to lending moral and political support to the rebels, and it criticizes India for human rights abuses in “Indian-occupied Kashmir.”

⁴⁷ See [<http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2006/02/20060222-2.html>] and [<http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2006/03/20060304-2.html>].

⁴⁸ Interview with the New York Post editorial board, October 1, 2007.

⁴⁹ Article 63(1)(k) of Pakistan's constitution bars any person from being elected to Parliament within a two-year period of that person's having been in other government service (e.g., in the military). Article 41(2) states that eligibility for election as president requires eligibility for election to Parliament. Article 43(1) bars the president from holding "any office of profit in the service of Pakistan."

India held Pakistan responsible for late 2001 terrorist attacks in Kashmir and on the Indian Parliament complex in New Delhi. The Indian response, a massive military mobilization, was mirrored by Pakistan and within months some one million heavily-armed soldiers were facing-off at the international frontier. During an extremely tense 2002 another full-scale war seemed a real and even likely possibility, and may have been averted only through international diplomatic efforts, including multiple visits to the region by top U.S. officials. An April 2003 peace initiative brought major improvement in the bilateral relationship, allowing for an October cease-fire agreement initiated by Pakistan. The process led to a January 2004 summit meeting in Islamabad and a joint agreement to re-engage a “Composite Dialogue” to bring about “peaceful settlement of all bilateral issues, including Jammu and Kashmir, to the satisfaction of both sides.”⁵⁰

During 2004, numerous mid-level meetings, normalized diplomatic relations, and increased people-to-people contacts brought modest, but still meaningful progress toward stable relations. Regular dialogue continued in 2005 and a third round of Composite Dialogue talks was held in 2006. Numerous confidence-building measures have been put in place, most notably travel and commerce across the Kashmiri LOC for the first time in decades, and bilateral trade has increased. Yet militarized territorial disputes over Kashmir, the Siachen Glacier, and the Sir Creek remain unresolved, and Pakistani officials regularly express unhappiness that more substantive progress, especially on the “core issue” of Kashmir, is not occurring.

Following July 2006 terrorist bombings in Bombay, India, New Delhi postponed planned foreign secretary-level talks, bringing into question the continued viability of the already slow-moving process. However, after meeting on the sidelines of a Nonaligned Movement summit in Cuba in September, President Musharraf and Indian Prime Minister Singh announced a resumption of formal peace negotiations and also approved implementation of a joint anti-terrorism mechanism. The Composite Dialogue resumed in November after a four-month hiatus when Foreign Secretary Khan paid a visit to New Delhi for talks with his Indian counterpart. No progress was made on outstanding territorial disputes, and India is not known to have presented evidence of Pakistani involvement in the 7/11 Bombay terrorist bombings, but the two officials did give shape to the proposed joint anti-terrorism mechanism and they agreed to continue the dialogue process in early 2007. A notable step came in December 2006, when bilateral talks on the militarized Sir Creek dispute ended with agreement to conduct a joint survey.

⁵⁰ [http://www.indianembassy.org/press_release/2004/jan/07.htm].

In January 2007, Pakistani Foreign Minister Kasuri hosted his Indian counterpart, Pranab Mukherjee, in Islamabad for the first such visit in more than a year. The two men reviewed past progress and planned for a fourth Composite Dialogue round in March. On February 18, two bombs exploded on an Indian segment of the Samjhauta [Friendship] Express train linking Delhi, India, with Lahore, Pakistan. Resulting fires killed 68 people, most of them Pakistanis. Days later, Kasuri traveled to New Delhi, where he and Mukherjee reaffirmed a bilateral commitment to the peace process despite the apparent effort to subvert it. While India refused a Pakistani request to undertake a joint investigation into that attack, the two countries did sign an agreement to reduce the risk of accidental nuclear war.

The new joint Pakistan-India anti-terrorism mechanism met for the first time in Islamabad in March 2007 and produced a joint statement in which both governments agreed to use the forum for exchanging information about investigations of and/or efforts to prevent terrorist acts on either side of the shared border, and to meet quarterly while immediately conveying urgent information. Hopes that the Samjhauta train bombing would provide a fitting “test case” apparently were dashed, however, when India declined to share relevant investigative information with Pakistan. Moreover, Indian officials were unhappy with Islamabad’s insistence that the “freedom struggle” underway in Kashmir should not be treated as terrorism under this framework. Still, the continuing engagement even after a major terrorist attack was widely viewed as evidence that the bilateral peace process had gained a sturdy momentum. A new rounds of dialogue was then launched in mid-March, when the two foreign ministers met again in Islamabad. No new agreements were reached, but both officials lauded improved bilateral relations and held “the most sustained and intensive dialogue” ever on the Kashmir problem.⁵¹ Political turmoil and uncertainty arose in Islamabad around that same time, however, and has since greatly slowed progress in the Pakistan-India peace process.

The “IPI” Pipeline Project. Islamabad insists it is going forward with a proposed joint pipeline project to deliver Iranian natural gas to Pakistan and possibly on to India. In January 2007, officials from the three countries resolved a long-running price-mechanism dispute, opening the way for further progress. In February, the fourth meeting of the Pakistan-India Joint Working Group on the Iran-Pakistan-India (IPI) pipeline was held in Islamabad, where the two countries agreed to split equally expected gas supplies. In June, Pakistani and Indian officials reportedly reached an agreement in principle on transportation charges, and officials from all three countries suggested a final deal was imminent. Prime Minister Aziz has described the pipeline as being critical to Pakistan’s economic growth and political stability. Doubts about financing the approximately $7 billion project combined with concerns about security in Pakistan’s Baluchistan province have some analysts skeptical about fruition. Some independent observers and Members of Congress assert that completion of the pipeline would represent a major confidence-building measure in the region and could bolster regional energy security while facilitating friendlier Pakistan-India ties (see, for example, H.Res. 353 in the 109th Congress).

⁵¹ See Pakistan Foreign Ministry Press Release No. 81/2007 at [http://www.mofa.gov.pk/-Press_Releases/2007/March/PR_81_07.htm].

As part of its efforts to isolate Iran economically, the Bush Administration actively seeks to dissuade the Islamabad and New Delhi governments from participation in this project, and a State Department official has suggested that current U.S. law dictates American opposition: The Iran-Libya Sanctions Act (P.L. 107-24) requires the President to impose sanctions on foreign companies that make an “investment” of more than $20 million in one year in Iran’s energy sector. The 109th Congress extended this provision in the Iran Freedom Support Act (P.L. 109-293). No firms have been sanctioned under this act to date. (See also CRS Report RS20871, The Iran Sanctions Act.)

Afghanistan. Pakistani leaders have long sought access to Central Asia and “strategic depth” with regard to India though friendly relations with neighboring Afghanistan. Such policy contributed to President General Zia ul-Haq’s support for Afghan mujahideen “freedom fighters” who were battling Soviet invaders during the 1980s and to Islamabad’s later support for the Afghan Taliban regime from 1996 to 2001. British colonialists had purposely divided the ethnic Pashtun tribes inhabiting the mountainous northwestern reaches of their South Asian empire with the 1893 “Durand Line.” This porous, 1,600-mile border is not accepted by Afghan leaders, who have at times fanned Pashtun nationalism to the dismay of Pakistanis.

Following Islamabad’s major September 2001 policy shift, President Musharraf consistently has vowed full Pakistani support for the government of Afghan President Hamid Karzai and he insists that Pakistan is playing a “totally neutral role” in Afghanistan. Islamabad claims to have arrested more than 500 Taliban militants in 2006, remanding 400 of them to Afghan custody, and reportedly has provided $300 million in economic assistance to Kabul since 2001. Nevertheless, the two leaders have continuously exchanged public accusations and recriminations about the ongoing movement of Islamic militants in the border region, and U.S. officials have issued increasingly strong claims about the problems posed by Taliban insurgents and other militants who are widely believed to enjoy safehaven on the Pakistani side of the Durand Line. Moreover, Pakistan is wary of signs that India is pursuing a policy of “strategic encirclement,” taking note of New Delhi’s past support for Tajik and Uzbek militias which comprised the Afghan Northern Alliance, and the post-2001 opening of numerous Indian consulates in Afghanistan. Both Pakistan and Afghanistan play central roles as U.S. allies in global efforts to combat Islamic militancy. Continuing acrimony between Islamabad and Kabul is thus deleterious to U.S. interests.

In August 2007, an unprecedented joint “jirga,” or tribal assembly, was held in Kabul and included nearly 700 delegates from both Pakistan and Afghanistan. The meeting was endorsed by the United States as a means of bringing stability to Afghanistan. In the days immediately preceding the opening session, some 40 tribal elders from North Waziristan announced they would not attend, saying the absence of Taliban representatives rendered it pointless, and President Musharraf himself later announced his withdrawal from participation. Analysts widely considered the move a snub to both Afghan President Karzai and to the U.S. government, which expressed dismay at the decision. Musharraf made a last-minute decision to attend the final day’s session, where he offered a rare admission that support for militants emanating from Pakistan has caused problems for Afghanistan, saying “There is no doubt Afghan militants are supported from Pakistan soil. The problem that you have in your region is because support is provided from our side.” The jirga ended with a declaration that included plans for dialogue with “the opposition,” i.e., the Taliban⁵² (see also “Infiltration into Afghanistan” section below).

The China Factor. Pakistan and China have enjoyed a generally close and mutually beneficial relationship over several decades. Pakistan served as a link between Beijing and Washington in 1971, as well as a bridge to the Muslim world for China during the 1980s. China’s continuing role as a major arms supplier for Pakistan began in the 1960s and included helping to build a number of arms factories in Pakistan, as well as supplying complete weapons systems. After the 1990 imposition of U.S. sanctions on Pakistan, the Islamabad-Beijing arms relationship was further strengthened (see CRS Report RL31555, China and Proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction and Missiles: Policy Issues). Indian leaders have called the Islamabad-Beijing nuclear and missile “proliferation nexus” a cause of serious concern in New Delhi, and U.S. officials remain seized of this potentially destabilizing dynamic.

Analysts taking a realist, power political perspective view China as an external balancer in the South Asian subsystem, with Beijing’s material support for Islamabad allowing Pakistan to challenge the aspiring regional hegemony of a more powerful India. Many observers, especially in India, see Chinese support for Pakistan as a key aspect of Beijing’s perceived policy of “encirclement” or constraint of India as a means of preventing or delaying New Delhi’s ability to challenge Beijing’s region-wide influence.

In April 2005, the Chinese prime minister visited Islamabad, where Pakistan and China signed 22 accords meant to boost bilateral cooperation. President Musharraf’s five-day visit to Beijing in February 2006 saw bilateral discussions on counterterrorism, trade, and technical assistance. Chinese President Hu’s November 2006 travel to Islamabad was the first such visit by a Chinese president in ten years; another 18 new bilateral pacts were inked, including a bilateral Free Trade Agreement and plans for joint development of airborne early warning radars. Islamabad may seek future civil nuclear assistance from Beijing, including potential provision of complete power reactors, especially in light of Washington’s categorical refusal of Pakistan’s request for a civil nuclear cooperation similar to that being planned between the United States and India.

In May 2007, Prime Minister Aziz visited Beijing, where Pakistan and China signed 27 new agreements and memoranda of understanding to “re-energize” bilateral cooperation in numerous areas, including defense, space technology, and trade. No public mention was made regarding civil nuclear cooperation. The Chinese government has assisted Pakistan in constructing a major new port at Gwadar, near the border with Iran; Islamabad and Beijing aspire to make this port, officially opened in March 2007, a major commercial outlet for Central Asian states. Some ⁵² “Pakistan Leader Snubs Afghan Meeting,” Reuters, August 8, 2007; Taimoor Shah and Carlotta Gall, “Afghan Rebels Find Haven in Pakistan, Musharraf Says,” New York Times, August 12, 2007. Declaration text at [http://www.dailytimes.com.pk/print.asp?page=2007\08\13\story_13-8-2007_pg7_48].

Western and Indian analysts are concerned that the port may be used for military purposes and could bolster China's naval presence in the Indian Ocean region. Pakistan continues to view China as an "all-weather friend" and perhaps its most important strategic ally.

Pakistan-U.S. Relations and Key Country Issues

U.S. policy interests in Pakistan encompass a wide range of issues, including counterterrorism, nuclear weapons and missile proliferation, South Asian and Afghan stability, democratization and human rights, trade and economic reform, and efforts to counter narcotics trafficking. Relations have been affected by several key developments, including proliferation- and democracy-related sanctions; a continuing Pakistan-India nuclear standoff and conflict over Kashmir; and the September 2001 terrorist attacks against the United States. In the wake of those attacks, President Musharraf — under intense U.S. diplomatic pressure — offered President Bush Pakistan's "unstinted cooperation in the fight against terrorism." Pakistan became a vital ally in the U.S.-led anti-terrorism coalition. U.S. sanctions relating to Pakistan's 1998 nuclear tests and 1999 military coup quickly were waived and, in October 2001, large tranches of U.S. aid began flowing into Pakistan. Direct assistance programs include training and equipment for Pakistani security forces, along with aid for health, education, food, democracy promotion, human rights improvement, counternarcotics, border security and law enforcement, as well as trade preference benefits. The United States also supports grant, loan, and debt rescheduling programs for Pakistan by the various major international financial institutions. In June 2004, President Bush designated Pakistan as a major non-NATO ally of the United States under Section 517 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. Revelations in 2004 that Pakistan has been a source of nuclear proliferation to North Korea, Iran, and Libya complicated Pakistan-U.S. relations and attracted congressional attention as a serious security issue.

Terrorism

After the September 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States, Pakistan pledged and has provided major support for the U.S.-led global anti-terrorism coalition. According to the U.S. Departments of State and Defense, Pakistan has afforded the United States unprecedented levels of cooperation by allowing the U.S. military to use bases within the country, helping to identify and detain extremists, tightening the border between Pakistan and Afghanistan, and blocking terrorist financing.⁵³ Top U.S. officials regularly praise Pakistani anti-terrorism efforts. In a landmark January 2002 speech, President Musharraf vowed to end Pakistan's use as a base for terrorism of any kind, and he banned numerous militant groups, including Lashkar-e-Taiba and Jaish-e-Muhammad, both blamed for terrorist violence in Kashmir and India, and both designated as terrorist organizations under U.S. law. In the wake of the speech, thousands of Muslim extremists were detained, though most of these were later released. In the spring of 2002, U.S. military and law enforcement personnel began engaging in direct, low-profile efforts to assist Pakistani security forces in tracking and apprehending fugitive Al Qaeda and Taliban fighters on Pakistani territory. Pakistani authorities claim to have captured at least 750 Al Qaeda suspects and remanded most of these to U.S. custody.⁵⁴

⁵³ See, for example, "Pakistan Key Partner in War on Terror, Defense Department Says," U.S. Department of State Washington File, March 6, 2006; "Pakistan 'Indispensable' in Global Anti-Terrorism Fight," U.S. Department of State Washington File, July 25, 2007.

Important Al Qaeda-related arrests in Pakistan have included Abu Zubaydah (March 2002), Ramzi bin al-Shibh (September 2002), Khalid Sheik Mohammed (March 2003), and Abu Faraj al-Libbi (May 2005). Other allegedly senior Al Qaeda figures were killed in gunbattles and missile attacks, including in several apparent U.S.-directed attacks on Pakistani territory from aerial drones. Yet Al Qaeda fugitives and their Taliban allies remain active in Pakistan, especially in the mountainous tribal regions along the Afghan border. Meanwhile, numerous banned indigenous groups continue to operate under new names: Lashkar-e-Taiba became Jamaat al-Dawat (banned under U.S. law in April 2006); Jaish-e-Mohammed was re-dubbed Khudam-ul Islam.

President Musharraf repeatedly has vowed to end the activities of religious extremists in Pakistan and to permanently prevent banned groups from resurfacing there. His policies likely spurred two lethal but failed attempts to assassinate him in December 2003. At present, Islamabad declares a four-pronged strategy to counter terrorism and religious extremism, containing military, political, administrative, and development aspects. Nonetheless, some analysts have long called Musharraf's efforts cosmetic, ineffective, and the result of international pressure rather than a genuine recognition of the threat posed. In recent years, some Pakistani nationals and religious seminaries have been linked to Islamist terrorism plots in Western countries, especially the United Kingdom. In a January 2007 review of global threats, then-U.S. Director of Intelligence John Negroponte issued what may have been the strongest relevant statements from a Bush Administration official to date, telling a Senate panel that, "Pakistan is a frontline partner in the war on terror. Nevertheless, it remains a major source of Islamic extremism and the home for some top terrorist leaders." He identified Al Qaeda as posing the single greatest terrorist threat to the United States and its interests, and warned that the organization's "core elements ... maintain active connections and relationships that radiate outward from their leaders' secure hideout in Pakistan" to affiliates on four continents.⁵⁵

In February 2007, Vice President Cheney and the Deputy Director of the CIA, Steve Kappes, made an unannounced four-hour visit to Islamabad, where they reportedly warned President Musharraf that a Democratic-controlled Congress could cut U.S. aid to Pakistan unless that country takes more aggressive action to hunt down Al Qaeda and Taliban operatives on its soil.⁵⁶ The unusually strong admonition came after U.S. intelligence officials concluded that a "terrorist infrastructure” had been rebuilt in western Pakistan, that Islamabad’s counterterrorism efforts had been feckless to date, and that the Bush Administration was recognizing that current U.S. and Pakistani policies were not working. When asked during a February Senate hearing about the possible source of a hypothetical future Al Qaeda attack on the United States, the new Director of National Intelligence, Mike McConnell, stated his belief that such an attack “most likely would be planned and come out of the [Al Qaeda] leadership in Pakistan.”⁵⁷ The State Department’s Country Reports on Terrorism 2006, released in April 2007, said “Pakistan executed effective counterterrorism cooperation and captured or killed many terrorists” while also reiterating U.S. concerns that the Federally Administered Tribal Areas (FATA) is “a safe haven for Al Qaeda, the Taliban, and other militants.”⁵⁸ According to Under Secretary of State Burns in July 2007 testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee,

⁵⁴ "Al Qaeda Fugitive Detained by Pakistan," USA Today, May 2, 2006.

⁵⁵ Statement before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, January 11, 2007, at [<http://intelligence.senate.gov/hearings.cfm?hearingId=2467>].

⁵⁶ David Sanger and Mark Mazzetti, "Cheney Warns Pakistan to Act on Terrorism," New York Times, February 26, 2007.

We know that the tribal areas of the mountainous border regions inside Pakistan have never been within the effective control of any central government. We know that the regions of North and South Waziristan have become safehavens for violent extremist and terrorist activity.... [W]e would like to see a more sustained and effective effort by the Pakistani government to defeat terrorist forces on its soil.

Although the United States lauded Islamabad’s anti-terrorism financing efforts earlier this decade, Under Secretary Burns also encouraged more energetic Pakistani action in this area:

We want to see Pakistan use all tools at its disposal to choke the flow of funds to terrorist groups. We are particularly concerned about terrorist groups exploiting charitable donations, and by their tactic of re-forming under new names to evade international prohibitions on donations to terrorist organizations.... We urge Pakistan to pass an Anti-Money Laundering bill that meets international standards, and to establish a Financial Intelligence Unit within the State Bank of Pakistan.⁵⁹

Pakistani officials are resentful of criticisms and doubts about their commitment to the counterterrorist fight, and they aver that U.S. pressure on Pakistan to “do more” could undermine President Musharraf and destabilize his government.⁶⁰

Al Qaeda in Pakistan. Pakistani authorities reportedly have remanded to U.S. custody roughly 500 wanted Al Qaeda fugitives to date, including some senior ⁵⁷ Statement before the Senate Armed Services Committee, February 27, 2007. A July 2007 National Intelligence Estimate on the terrorist threat included the assessment that Al Qaeda has “protected or regenerated” its capability to attack the United States, in part due to its enjoying “safehaven” in Pakistan’s tribal areas (see [http://www.dni.gov/press_releases/20070717_release.pdf]).

⁵⁸ See [<http://www.state.gov/s/ct/rls/crt/2006/82734.htm>].

⁵⁹ See [<http://www.state.gov/p/us/rm/2007/89418.htm>].

⁶⁰ David Sanger and Mark Mazzetti, “Cheney Warns Pakistan to Act on Terrorism,” New York Times, February 25, 2007; Shahzeb Jillani, “US May Be ‘Undermining’ Pakistan,” BBC News, March 1, 2007; author interviews with Pakistani government officials.

alleged operatives. However, despite clear successes in disrupting Al Qaeda and affiliated networks in Pakistan since 2001, there are increasing signs that anti-U.S. terrorists have benefitted from what some analysts call a Pakistani policy of appeasement in western tribal areas near the Afghan border. By seeking accommodation with pro-Taliban leaders in these areas, the Musharraf government appears to have inadvertently allowed foreign (largely Arab) militants to obtain safe haven from which they can plot and train for terrorist attacks against U.S. and other Western targets. Moreover, many observers warn that an American preoccupation with Iraq has contributed to allowing Al Qaeda's reemergence in Pakistan.⁶¹

Al Qaeda founder Osama Bin Laden and his lieutenant, Egyptian Islamic radical leader Ayman al-Zawahri, are believed by many to be hiding somewhere in Pakistan's western border region. Pakistani officials reject such suspicions and generally insist there is no evidence to support them, but numerous U.S. officials have suggested otherwise. While some 2006 reports placed the Al Qaeda founder in the remote Dir Valley of northwestern Pakistan, the country's prime minister said those hunting Bin Laden had no clues as to his whereabouts, a claim bolstered by Western press reports indicating that the U.S. and other special forces tasked with finding Bin Laden had not received a credible lead in years.⁶² President Bush has said he would order U.S. forces to enter Pakistan if he received good intelligence on Osama Bin Laden's location.⁶³

Infiltration Into Afghanistan. Tensions between the Kabul and Islamabad governments — which stretch back many decades — have at times reached alarming levels in recent years, with top Afghan officials accusing Pakistan of manipulating Islamic militancy in the region to destabilize Afghanistan. Likewise, U.S. military commanders overseeing Operation Enduring Freedom have since 2003 complained that renegade Al Qaeda and Taliban fighters remain able to attack coalition troops in Afghanistan, then escape across the Pakistani frontier. They have expressed dismay at the slow pace of progress in capturing wanted fugitives in Pakistan and urge Islamabad to do more to secure its rugged western border area. U.S. government officials have voiced similar worries, even expressing concern that elements of Pakistan's intelligence agency might be assisting members of the Taliban. In June 2006, the State Department's top counterterrorism official told a Senate panel that elements of Pakistan's "local, tribal governments" are believed to be in collusion with the Taliban and Al Qaeda, but that the United States had no "compelling evidence" that Pakistan's intelligence agency is assisting militants.⁶⁴ In September

⁶¹ See, for example, Bruce Riedel, "Al Qaeda Strikes Back," Foreign Affairs, May 2007; Greg Miller, "Influx of Al Qaeda, Money Into Pakistan Is Seen," Los Angeles Times, May 20, 2007.

⁶² See, for example, Evan Thomas, "The Ongoing Hunt for Osama bin Laden," Newsweek, September 3, 2007.

⁶³ "Bush Would Send Troops Inside Pakistan to Catch bin Laden," CNN.com, September 20, 2006.

⁶⁴ After conducting interviews with numerous active and retired Pakistan army and intelligence officials, an American reporter concluded in late 2007 that "many officers of (continued...)"

2006, the Commander of the U.S. European Command, General James Jones, told the same Senate panel it was “generally accepted” that the Taliban headquarters is somewhere in the vicinity of Quetta, the capital of Pakistan’s southwestern Baluchistan province.⁶⁵

Pakistan Launches Internal Military Operations. During the autumn of 2003, in an unprecedented show of force, President Musharraf moved 25,000 Pakistani troops into the traditionally autonomous FATA on the Afghan frontier. The first half of 2004 saw an escalation of Pakistani army operations, many in coordination with U.S. and Afghan forces just across the international frontier (U.S. forces have no official authorization to cross the border into Pakistan).⁶⁶ The battles, which continued sporadically throughout 2005 and again became fierce in the spring of 2006, exacerbated volatile anti-Musharraf and anti-American sentiments held by many Pakistani Pashtuns.⁶⁷

Kabul’s October 2004 elections were held without major disturbances, apparently in part due to Musharraf’s commitment to reducing infiltrations. Yet concerns sharpened in 2005 and, by the middle of that year, Afghan leaders were openly accusing Islamabad of actively supporting insurgents and providing their leadership with safe haven. Islamabad adamantly denied the charges and sought to reassure Kabul by dispatching additional troops to border areas, bringing the total to 80,000. Still, 2006 was the deadliest year to date for U.S. troops in Afghanistan and, at year’s end, there were growing indications that Islamabad’s efforts to control the tribal areas were meeting with little success.

President Musharraf’s “carrot and stick” approach of offering amnesty to those militant tribals who “surrendered,” and using force against those who resisted, clearly did not rid the region of indigenous Islamic militants or Al Qaeda operatives. Late 2005 and early 2006 missile attacks on suspected Al Qaeda targets — apparently launched by U.S. aerial drones flying over Pakistani territory — hinted at more aggressive U.S. tactics that could entail use of U.S. military assets in areas where the Pakistan’s covert security agencies remain emotionally committed to jihad and hostile to the U.S. role in the region” (James Rupert, “Role of Pakistan’s ‘Captain’ Shows Enduring Taliban Ties,” Newsday, October 14, 2007).

⁶⁴ (...continued)

⁶⁵ See also Elizabeth Rubin, “In the Land of the Taliban,” New York Times, October 22, 2006.

⁶⁶ One U.S. press report claimed that Pentagon documents from 2004 gave U.S. special forces in Afghanistan authority to enter Pakistani territory — even without prior notice to Islamabad — while in “hot pursuit” of Al Qaeda and Taliban fighters or to take direct action against “the Big 3”: Osama bin Laden, Ayman al Zawahri, or Mullah Omar. A Pakistani military spokesman called the report “nonsense” and denied there was any such arrangement (“U.S. OK’d Troop Terror Hunts in Pakistan,” Associated Press, August 23, 2007).

⁶⁷ Pakistan is home to some 28 million Pashto-speaking people, most of them living near the border with Afghanistan, which is home to another 13.5 million ethnic Pashtuns (also known as Pakhtuns or Pathans). A hardy people with a proud martial history (they are disproportionately represented in the Pakistani military), Pashtuns played an important role in the anti-Soviet resistance of the 1980s.

Pakistanis are either unable or unwilling to strike. Yet the attacks, in particular a January 13, 2006, strike on Damadola in the Bajaur tribal agency that killed women and children along with several alleged Al Qaeda suspects, spurred widespread resentment and a perception that the country's sovereignty was under threat.

Meanwhile, Pakistani troops operating in the region are hampered by limited communications and other counterinsurgency capabilities, meaning their response to provocations can be overly reliant on imprecise, mass firepower. This has contributed to a significant number of civilian casualties. Simultaneously, tribal leaders who cooperate with the federal government face dire threats from the extremists — as many as 200 were the victims of targeted killings in 2005 and 2006 — and the militants have sought to deter such cooperation by periodically beheading accused “U.S. spies.”

Islamabad Shifts Strategy. As military operations failed to subdue the militants while causing much “collateral damage” and alienating local residents, Islamabad in 2004 began shifting strategy and sought to arrange truces with Waziri commanders, first at Shakai in South Waziristan in April 2004, then again in February 2005. Officials in Islamabad recognized that the social fabric of the FATA had changed following its role as a staging and recruiting area for the war against the Soviet Army in Afghanistan during the 1980s: the traditional power base was eroded as the influence of religious elements had greatly increased. President Musharraf lambasts the creeping “Talibanization” of the tribal areas and has sought to implement a new scheme, shifting over time from an almost wholly militarized approach to one emphasizing negotiation and economic development in the FATA, as well as (re-)elevating the role of tribal maliks who would work in closer conjunction with federal political agents. The aim, then, became restoration of a kind of enhanced status quo ante with a limited state writ (maliks would enjoy more pay and larger levies), and the reduction and ultimately full withdrawal of army troops.⁶⁸ Some reports had the U.S. government initially offering cautious support for this new political strategy.⁶⁹

Cease-Fire and North Waziristan Truce. In June 2006, militants in North Waziristan announced a unilateral 30-day cease-fire to allow for creation of a tribal council seeking resolution with government forces. The Islamabad government began releasing detained Waziri tribesmen and withdrawing troops from selected checkpoints in a show of goodwill. Hundreds of Pashtun tribesmen and clerics later held a tribal council with government officials, and the cease-fire was extended for another month. Throughout July and August, Pakistan reported arresting scores of Taliban fighters and remanding many of these to Afghanistan. Then, on September 5, 2006, the Islamabad government and pro-Taliban militants in Miramshah, North Waziristan, signed a truce to ensure “permanent peace” in the region. A representative of the North West Frontier Province (NWFP) governor agreed on behalf of the government to end army operations against local tribesmen; release all detainees; lift all public sanctions, pay compensation for property damage, return confiscated vehicles and other goods; and remove all new army checkposts. In turn, two representatives of the North Waziristan “local mujahideen students” (trans. “Taliban”) agreed to end their attacks on government troops and officials; halt the cross-border movement of insurgents to Afghanistan; and evict all foreigners who did not agree to live in peace and honor the pact.⁷⁰

⁶⁸ Author interview with a senior advisor to Prime Minister Aziz, Islamabad, September 2006; “President General Pervez Musharraf’s Address to the Nation,” July 20, 2006, at [<http://www.presidentofpakistan.gov.pk/SpeechAddressList.aspx>].

⁶⁹ Jonathan Landay, “White House Backing New Plan to Defuse Insurrection in Pakistan,” McClatchy Newspapers, August 16, 2006.

News of the truce received lukewarm reception in Washington, where officials took a “wait-and-see” approach to the development. Within weeks there was growing concern among both U.S. government officials and independent analysts that the North Waziristan truce represented a Pakistani “surrender” and had in effect created a sanctuary for extremists, with the rate of Taliban activities in neighboring Afghanistan much increased and the militants failing to uphold their commitments. Still, Islamabad pressed ahead with a plan to extend a similar truce to the Bajaur tribal agency. Only hours before such a deal was to be struck on October 30, 2006, 82 people were killed in a dawn air attack on a madrassa in Chingai, Bajaur. The Pakistani military claimed to have undertaken the attack after the school’s pro-Taliban leader continued to train terrorists and shelter “unwanted foreigners,” yet many observers speculated that the attack had in fact been carried out by U.S. Predator drones, perhaps after intelligence reports placed fugitive Al Qaeda lieutenant al-Zawahri at the site. Nine days later, after a local pro-Taliban militant leader vowed to retaliate against Pakistani security forces, a suicide bomber killed 42 army recruits at a military training camp at Dargai in the NWFP, not far from the sight of the Chingai attack. The bombing was the most deadly attack on the Pakistani military in recent memory.

The FATA in 2007. Instability in the FATA has only increased in 2007, with a large trust deficit between government forces and tribal leaders, and a conclusion by top U.S. officials that President Musharraf’s strategy of making truce deals with pro-Taliban militants has failed. In January, the director of the U.S. Defense Intelligence Agency, Lt. Gen. Michael Maples, told a Senate panel that tribal leaders in Waziristan had not abided by most terms of the September 2006 North Waziristan agreement.⁷¹ In March, Undersecretary of Defense for Policy Eric Edelman reported to the same panel that there was “an almost immediate and steady increase of cross-border infiltration and attacks” just after that agreement had been reached. Some reports even describe anecdotes of the Pakistani military providing fire support for Taliban units operating in Afghanistan.⁷² Combat between Pakistani troops and militants in the two Waziristan agencies reportedly has killed roughly 1,000 Islamist extremists (many of them foreigners), along with a similar number of Pakistani soldiers and many hundreds of civilians.

⁷⁰ A translated version of the pact is at [<http://www.pbs.org/wgbh/pages/frontline/taliban/etc/nwdeal.html>].

⁷¹ Statement before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, January 11, 2007, at [<http://intelligence.senate.gov/hearings.cfm?hearingId=2467>].

⁷² David Sanger and David Rhode, “U.S. Pays Pakistan to Fight Terror, But Patrols Ebb,” New York Times, May 20, 2007.

In late March 2007, battles erupted between tribal forces and Uzbek militants in South Waziristan. Heavy arms — including mortars, large-caliber machineguns, and rockets — were used by both sides, and some 300 people, most of them Uzbeks, were reported killed. President Musharraf later acknowledged that the Pakistani army had provided fire support for what essentially were pro-Taliban tribal forces. The fighting was touted by Islamabad as a sign that its new strategy was paying dividends. Yet such conflict may well have been more about long-brewing local resentments toward Uzbeks, and there is further concern among skeptics that the battles served to strengthen the “Pakistani Taliban” and helped to consolidate their control in the tribal areas.⁷³

By early 2007, U.S. intelligence analysts had amassed considerable evidence indicating that Islamabad’s truces with religious militants in the FATA had given Taliban, Al Qaeda, and other Islamist extremists space in which to rebuild their networks. Faced with such evidence, President Musharraf refrained from any change in strategy, saying he was “making adjustments” and would proceed cautiously. A behind-the-scenes diplomatic effort to prod the Musharraf government on its counterterrorism strategy was ramped up during the course of the year, but it may have only been through more public and strongly-worded U.S. criticisms of Pakistan in July that Islamabad was convinced to be more energetic in its militarized efforts.⁷⁴ A spate of militant attacks on Pakistani military targets during that month — apparently in retaliation for the government’s armed assault on Islamabad’s radical Red Mosque — led Musharraf to further bolster the army’s presence in the region and coincided with an announcement by North Waziristan tribal leaders that they were withdrawing from the September 2006 truce agreement due to alleged government violations. Top Bush Administration officials subsequently conceded that the agreement had failed to produce the desired results for both Pakistan and the United States, and they suggested the tack should be abandoned.⁷⁵ Still, Musharraf reportedly intends to withdraw all regular army troops from the tribal areas by January 2008, leaving security responsibilities in the hands of paramilitary forces.⁷⁶

Meanwhile, it appears the “Pakistani Taliban” of North Waziristan has succeeded in establishing a local administrative infrastructure much as was done in South Waziristan following the April 2004 Shakai agreement.⁷⁷ In the words of one Washington-based expert, ⁷³ Kim Barker, “Pakistan’s Unlikely Alliances Worry West,” Chicago Tribune, April 22, 2007; Ismail Khan, “The Game Is Up for Uzbeks,” Dawn (Karachi), April 5, 2007.

⁷⁴ Karen DeYoung and Joby Warrick, “Tougher Stance on Pakistan Took Months,” Washington Post, August 5, 2007.

⁷⁵ Caren Bohan, “U.S. Boosts Pressure on Musharraf Over Al Qaeda,” Reuters, July 18, 2007.

⁷⁶ “‘No Army in FATA After Jan 2008,’” Daily Times (Lahore), August 25, 2007.

⁷⁷ See, for example, Syed Shoaib Hasan, “Venturing Into the Taleban’s Backyard,” BBC News, October 11, 2007; Jason Burke, “The New Taliban,” Observer (London), October 14, 2007.

“[W]e cannot ignore the fact that across much of Pakistan’s border with Afghanistan, Islamabad has, for now, lost the battle to fight militancy and terrorism.... [T]oday the Pakistan state has virtually ceded North and South Waziristan to powerful radical forces. Justice, education, and social policies are in the hands of the Pakistani militants who practice a strongly conservative form of Islam.... By indulging and supporting extremists as a tool to retain and hold influence in Afghanistan, Pakistan has introduced changes that undermined its ability to maintain its writ within its own borders.”⁷⁸

Reports also continue to indicate that the FATA increasingly provides a base for a new generation of Islamist militants and is the site of numerous terrorist training camps, some associated with Al Qaeda. In one recent example, according to German government sources, numerous suspects in an alleged Frankfurt bombing plot disrupted in September 2007 had received “terrorism training” at camps in Waziristan and their “direct orders to act” came from Pakistan.⁷⁹

Despite acknowledged setbacks, the Bush Administration claims to strongly support President Musharraf’s efforts to adopt a more comprehensive approach to include economic and social development, and governance reform in the region, flowing in part from an acknowledgment that purely military solutions are unlikely to succeed.⁸⁰ Yet international donors and lending agencies appear hesitant to finance projects in the region while the security situation remains tense, and some in the U.S. government reportedly are wary of infusing development aid that could end up in the hands of elements unfriendly to U.S. interests.⁸¹ Many analysts insist that only by bringing the tribal areas under the full writ of the Pakistani state and facilitating major economic development there can the FATA problem be resolved.⁸²

Infiltration into Kashmir and India. Islamabad has been under continuous U.S. and international pressure to terminate the infiltration of separatist militants ⁷⁸ Statement of Prof. Marvin Weinbaum before the House Armed Services Committee, October 10, 2007.

⁷⁹ Spencer Hsu and Craig Whitlock, “Official Links German Terror Plot to Syrian Arms, Pakistani Operatives,” Washington Post, September 26, 2007. See also Dirk Laabs and Sebastian Rotella, “Terrorists in Training Head to Pakistan,” Los Angeles Times, October 14, 2007.

⁸⁰ Statement of Assistant Secretary of State for South and Central Asian Affairs Richard Boucher before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Subcommittee on Middle East and South Asia, “Regional Overview of South Asia,” March 7, 2007, at [<http://www.internationalrelations.house.gov/110/bou030707.htm>]. Pakistani strategy as conveyed by the country’s Ambassador to the United Nations in Munir Akram, “A United Front Against the Taliban,” New York Times, April 4, 2007.

⁸¹ Jane Perlez, “Aid to Pakistan in Tribal Areas Raises Concerns,” New York Times, July 16, 2007.

⁸² See, for example, Barnett Rubin and Abubakar Siddique, “Resolving the Pakistan-Afghanistan Stalemate,” U.S. Institute of Peace Special Report 176, October 2006; “Pakistan’s Tribal Areas: Appeasing the Militants,” International Crisis Group Asia Report 125, December 11, 2006; Christine Fair, Nicholas Howenstein, and Alexander Thier, “Troubles on the Pakistan-Afghanistan Border,” U.S. Institute for Peace Briefing, December 2006.

across the Kashmiri Line of Control (LOC). Such pressure reportedly elicited a January 2002 promise from President Musharraf to then-U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage that all such movements would cease. During a June 2002 visit to Islamabad, Deputy Secretary Armitage reportedly received another pledge from the Pakistani president, this time an assurance that any existing terrorist camps in Pakistani Kashmir would be closed. Musharraf has assured India that he will not permit any territory under Pakistan's control to be used to support terrorism, and he insists that his government is doing everything possible to stop infiltration and shut down militant base camps in Pakistani-controlled territory. Critics contend, however, that Islamabad continues to actively support anti-India militants as a means both to maintain strategically the domestic backing of Islamists who view the Kashmir issue as fundamental to the Pakistani national idea, and to disrupt tactically the state government in Indian Kashmir in seeking to erode New Delhi's legitimacy there.

Positive indications growing from the latest Pakistan-India peace initiative include a cease-fire at the LOC that has held since November 2003 and statements from Indian officials indicating that rates of militant infiltration are down significantly. However, Indian leaders periodically reiterate their complaints that Islamabad has taken insufficient action to eradicate the remaining "infrastructure of terrorism" on Pakistani-controlled territory. With indications that terrorism on Indian soil beyond the Jammu and Kashmir state may have been linked to Pakistan-based terrorist groups, Indian leaders repeat demands that Pakistan uphold its promises to curtail the operations of Islamic militants and violent Kashmiri separatists originating on Pakistani-controlled territory.

Following conflicting reports from Indian government officials about the criminal investigation into July 2006 Bombay terrorist bombings, India's prime minister stated that India had "credible evidence" of Pakistani government complicity in the plot. Islamabad rejected Indian accusations as "propaganda" designed "to externalize an internal [Indian] malaise."⁸³ Several other terrorist attacks against Indian targets outside of Kashmir have been linked to Pakistan-based groups, including lethal assaults on civilians in Delhi and Bangalore in 2005, in Varanasi in 2006, and in Hyderabad in 2007. Indian security officials also routinely blame Pakistan's intelligence service for assisting the infiltration of Islamist militants into India from Nepal, Bangladesh, and Bhutan, as well as across the Kashmiri LOC.⁸⁴

Domestic Terrorism. Pakistan is known to be a base for numerous indigenous terrorist organizations, and the country continues to suffer from terrorism at home, in particular that targeting the country's Shia minority. Until a March 2006 car bombing at the U.S. consulate in Karachi that left one American diplomat dead, recent attacks on Western targets had been rare, but 2002 saw several acts of lethal anti-Western terrorism, including the kidnaping and murder of reporter Daniel Pearl, a grenade attack on a Protestant church in Islamabad that killed a U.S. Embassy employee, and two car bomb attacks, including one on the same U.S. consulate, ⁸³ "We Have Credible Evidence: Manmohan," Hindu (Madras), October 25, 2006; Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs Media Briefing, October 2, 2006.

⁸⁴ According to India's national security advisor, most terrorist activity in India has been "generated from outside" ("MK Narayanan" (interview), India Abroad, September 21, 2007).

which killed a total of 29 people. These attacks, widely viewed as expressions of militants' anger with the Musharraf regime for its cooperation with the United States, were linked to Al Qaeda, as well as to indigenous militant groups, by U.S. and Pakistani officials.

From 2003 to the present, Pakistan's most serious domestic terrorism has been directed against the country's Shia minority and included suicide bomb attacks that killed scores of people in 2005 and 2006 (nearly 60 Sunnis also were killed in an April 2006 suicide bombing in Karachi). Indications are that the indigenous Lashkar-e-Jhangvi (LJ) Sunni terrorist group is responsible for the most deadly anti-Shia violence. Two attempts to kill Musharraf in December 2003 and failed efforts to assassinate other top Pakistani officials in mid-2004 were linked to the LJ and other Al Qaeda-allied groups, and illuminated the grave and continuing danger presented by religious extremists.

Following a July 2006 suicide bombing in Karachi that killed a prominent Shiite cleric, Musharraf renewed his pledge to crack down on religious extremists; hundreds of Sunni clerics and activists were subsequently arrested for inciting violence against Shiites through sermons and printed materials. However, serious sectarian and other religiously-motivated violence flared anew in late 2006 and continue in 2007. Bomb attacks, many of them by suicidal extremists motivated by sectarian hatreds, killed scores of people; some reports link the upsurge in such attacks to growing sectarian conflict in Iraq. Since the summer of 2007 and continuing to the time of this writing, most suicide bomb attacks have been perpetrated against Pakistan's security apparatus in apparent retaliation for the army's July raid on Islamabad's radical Red Mosque. Among the spate of dozens of significant domestic terrorist attacks (indiscriminate or those targeting civilians) suffered by Pakistan in 2007 were

- a January bomb blast in Peshawar that killed 15 people, most of them policemen, including the city's police chief, in a likely anti-Shia attack;
- the February murder of six opposition People's Party activists west of Islamabad;
- a February suicide bombing in a Quetta courtroom that killed 16 people, including a judge;
- an April suicide bombing that killed at least 28 people and narrowly missed Pakistan's interior minister at a political rally in Peshawar;
- a May suicide bombing that killed up to 25 people at a Peshawar restaurant said to be popular with Afghan refugees;
- at least 8 separate July suicide bomb attacks that left more than 100 people dead in the NWFP, the tribal agencies, and Islamabad;
- dual September suicide car bombings in Bajaur that left seven dead, including three paramilitary soldiers;
- another dual September suicide bomb attack in Rawalpindi that killed at least 25 people, many of them employees of Pakistan's security agencies;
- a September suicide bomb attack near a security checkpoint in the NWFP that killed at least 16 people;
- an October suicide bomb attack that killed at least 15 people, including 4 police officers, at another security in the NWFP; and

- another October bomb attack, this time on the motorcade of former Prime Minister Bhutto as she returned to Karachi from self-imposed exile, killed at least 115 people.

A leading pro-Taliban militant in the South Waziristan tribal agency, Baitullah Mehsud, issued vows to avenge Pakistani military and paramilitary attacks in the region in early 2007; he reportedly has been linked to at least four anti-government suicide bombings in Pakistan.⁸⁵ Some analysts believe that, by redirecting Pakistan's internal security resources, an increase in such violence can ease pressure on Al Qaeda and affiliated groups and so allow them to operate more freely there. In June 2007, Pakistan's National Security Council reportedly warned President Musharraf that Islamist militancy was rapidly spreading beyond western tribal areas and that a "policy of appeasement" had emboldened the Taliban. The Council was said to have formulated new plans to address the issue, including the deployment of pilotless reconnaissance drones, bolstering local law enforcement capabilities, and shifting more paramilitary troops to the region from other parts of Pakistan.⁸⁶

Other Security Issues

Pakistan-U.S. Security Cooperation. U.S.-Pakistan security cooperation accelerated rapidly after 2001, and President Bush formally designated Pakistan as a major non-NATO U.S. ally in June 2004. The close U.S.-Pakistan security ties of the cold war era — which came to a near halt after the 1990 aid cutoff — have been restored as a result of Pakistan's role in the U.S.-led anti-terrorism campaign. In 2002, the United States began allowing commercial sales that enabled Pakistan to refurbish at least part of its fleet of American-made F-16 fighter aircraft. In 2005, the United States announced that it would resume sales of new F-16 fighters to Pakistan after a 16-year hiatus. A revived high-level U.S.-Pakistan Defense Consultative Group (DCG) — moribund since 1997 — again sits for high-level discussions on military cooperation, security assistance, and anti-terrorism; its most recent session came in May 2006. In 2003, a U.S.-Pakistan-Afghanistan Tripartite Commission was established to bring together military commanders for discussions on Afghan stability and border security; a session held in Pakistan in January 2007 included establishment of the first joint intelligence sharing center in Kabul to boost cooperation against Taliban and other extremists. Officers from NATO's International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan have joined the body, which met for the 22nd time in May 2007.⁸⁷

Major government-to-government arms sales and grants since 2001 include 6 C-130 military transport aircraft; 6 AN/TPS-77 surveillance radars; air traffic control systems; nearly 6,000 military radios; 100 Harpoon anti-ship missiles (with the possibility of sales of another 90); 6 Phalanx guns (with upgrades on another 6); and 2,014 TOW anti-armor missiles. In 2004, the U.S. Navy agreed to grant 8 excess P-3C Orion maritime patrol aircraft to Pakistan; plans for their major refurbishment and service by U.S. firms could be worth $1 billion in coming years. Other pending sales include up to 500 Sidewinder air-to-air missiles and 115 self-propelled howitzers. Major Excess Defense Article grants have included 20 refurbished AH-1F Cobra attack helicopters (with 20 more for parts) and 4 F-16A fighters (24 more such fighters will be transferred to Pakistan as they become excess to the U.S. Air Force). Further potential arms sales include costly plans to refurbish and modify three excess P-3 aircraft with the E-2C Hawkeye airborne early warning suite. The Department of Defense has characterized F-16 fighters, P-3C patrol aircraft, and anti-armor missiles as having significant anti-terrorism applications, claims that elicit skepticism from some analysts. The Pentagon reports total Foreign Military Sales agreements with Pakistan worth $863 million in FY2002-FY2005. In-process sales of F-16s raised the value to $3.5 billion in FY2006 alone.

⁸⁵ "Doubts Over Peace Deal," BBC News, January 17, 2007; "Baitullah Linked to Suicide Attacks, Says FIA Official," Dawn (Karachi), March 21, 2007.

⁸⁶ "Pakistani President Reviews Political, Economic, Anti-Terrorism Measures," BBC Monitoring South Asia, June 4, 2007.

⁸⁷ "Tripartite Commission Addresses Border Issues," International Security Assistance Force Press Release, May 26, 2007.

Security-related U.S. assistance programs for Pakistan are said aimed especially at bolstering Islamabad's counterterrorism and border security efforts, and have included U.S.-funded road-building projects in the NWFP and FATA; and the provision of night-vision equipment, communications gear, protective vests, and transport helicopters and aircraft. The United States also has undertaken to train and equip new Pakistan Army Air Assault units that can move quickly to find and target terrorist elements. Modest U.S.-funded military education and training programs seek to enhance the professionalism of Pakistan's military leaders, and develop respect for rule of law, human rights, and democratic values. U.S. security assistance to Pakistan's civilian sector is aimed at strengthening the country's law enforcement capabilities through basic police training, provision of advanced identification systems, and establishment of a new Counterterrorism Special Investigation Group. U.S. efforts reportedly are hindered by Pakistani shortcomings that include poorly trained and poorly equipped personnel who generally are underpaid by ineffectively coordinated and overburdened government agencies.⁸⁸ (See also CRS Report RL32259, Terrorism in South Asia.)

Renewed F-16 Sales and Congressional Concerns. In June 2006, the Pentagon notified Congress of a possible Foreign Military Sale to Pakistan worth up to $5.1 billion. The deal involves 18 newly-built advanced F-16 combat aircraft (and an option for 18 more), along with related munitions and equipment, and would represent the largest-ever weapons sale to Pakistan. Associated munitions for new F-16s and for mid-life upgrades on others will include 500 AMRAAM air-to-air missiles and 700 BLU-109 bombs. Congressional concerns about the sale and displeasure at the Bush Administration's apparently improper notification procedures spurred a July hearing of the House International Relations Committee. During that session, many Members worried that F-16s were better suited to fighting India than to combating terrorists; some warned that U.S. military technology could be passed from Pakistan to China. The State Department's lead official on political-military relations sought to assure the committee that the sale would serve U.S. interests by strengthening the defense capabilities of a key ally without disturbing the regional balance of power and that all possible measures would be taken to prevent the onward transfer of U.S. technologies. H.J.Res. 93, disapproving the proposed sale, was introduced in the House, but died in committee. (See also CRS Report RL33515, Combat Aircraft Sales to South Asia: Potential Implications.)

⁸⁸ See, for example, Seth Jones, et al., "Securing Tyrants or Fostering Reform?," RAND Corporation Monograph, January 7, ch. 6, 2007, at [http://www.rand.org/pubs/monographs/2006/RAND_MG550.pdf].

Secretary of State Rice subsequently informed Congress that no F-16 combat aircraft or related equipment would be delivered to Pakistan until Islamabad provided written security assurances that U.S. technology will not be accessible by third parties. Islamabad has denied that any “extraordinary” security requirements were requested; however, congressional concerns appear to have been satisfactorily addressed. After further negotiations on specifics, including a payment process that will require a major outlay from the Pakistani treasury, the United States and Pakistan in September signed a letter of acceptance for the multi-billion dollar F-16 deal. Since then, several major U.S. defense corporations have won contracts worth hundreds of millions of dollars to supply F-16 parts and munitions to Pakistan.

Nuclear Weapons and Missile Proliferation. Many policy analysts consider an apparent arms race between India and Pakistan to be among the most likely potential causes of the future use of nuclear weapons by states. In May 1998, India conducted unannounced nuclear tests, breaking a 24-year, self-imposed moratorium on such testing. Despite U.S. and world efforts to dissuade it, Pakistan quickly followed. The tests created a global storm of criticism and represented a serious setback to two decades of U.S. nuclear nonproliferation efforts in South Asia. Pakistan currently is believed to have enough fissile material, mainly enriched uranium, for 55-90 nuclear weapons; India, with a program focused on plutonium, may be capable of building a similar number. Both countries have aircraft capable of delivering nuclear bombs (U.S.-supplied F-16 combat aircraft in Pakistan’s air force reportedly have been refitted to carry nuclear bombs).⁸⁹ Pakistan’s military has inducted short- and medium-range ballistic missiles (allegedly acquired from China and North Korea), while India possesses short- and intermediate-range missiles. Both countries have tested cruise missiles with radar-evading capabilities. All missiles are assumed to be capable of delivering nuclear warheads over significant distances. In 2000, Pakistan placed its nuclear forces under the control of a National Command Authority led by the president. According to the director of the U.S. Defense Intelligence Agency, Pakistan is building its stockpile of fission weapons and is likely to continue work on advanced warhead and delivery systems.⁹⁰ (See also CRS Report RL32115, Missile Proliferation and the Strategic Balance in South Asia; and CRS Report RS21237, Indian and Pakistani Nuclear Weapons.)

The A.Q. Khan Nuclear Proliferation Network. Press reports in late 2002 suggested that Pakistan assisted Pyongyang’s covert nuclear weapons program by providing North Korea with uranium enrichment materials and technologies beginning in the mid-1990s and as recently as July 2002. Islamabad rejected such reports as “baseless,” and Secretary of State Powell was assured that no such transfers were occurring. If such assistance is confirmed by President Bush, all non-humanitarian U.S. aid to Pakistan may be suspended, although the President has the authority to waive any sanctions that he determines would jeopardize U.S. national security. In early 2003, the Administration determined that the relevant facts “do not warrant imposition of sanctions under applicable U.S. laws.” Press reports during 2003 suggested that both Iran and Libya benefitted from Pakistani nuclear assistance. Islamabad denied any nuclear cooperation with Tehran or Tripoli, although it conceded in December 2003 that certain senior scientists were under investigation for possible “independent” proliferation activities.

⁸⁹ “Pakistan Jets Said to be Nuclear-Capable,” Associated Press, July 25, 1989.

⁹⁰ Statement of Lt. Gen. Michael Maples before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, January 11, 2007, at [<http://intelligence.senate.gov/070111/maples.pdf>].

The investigation led to the February 2004 “public humiliation” of metallurgist Abdul Qadeer Khan, known as the founder of Pakistan’s nuclear weapons program and a national hero, when he confessed to involvement in an illicit nuclear smuggling network. Khan and at least seven associates were said to have sold crucial nuclear weapons technology and uranium-enrichment materials to North Korea, Iran, and Libya. President Musharraf, citing Khan’s contributions to his nation, issued a pardon that was later called conditional.⁹¹ The United States has been assured that the Islamabad government had no knowledge of such activities and indicated that the decision to pardon is an internal Pakistani matter.

While President Musharraf did promise President Bush that all information learned about Khan’s proliferation network would be shared, Pakistan has refused to allow any direct access to Khan by U.S. or international investigators.⁹² In May 2006, days after releasing from detention nuclear scientist and suspected Khan collaborator Mohammed Farooq, the Islamabad government declared the investigation “closed.” Some in Congress remained skeptical, however, and a House panel subsequently held a hearing at which three nongovernmental experts insisted that U.S. and international investigators be given direct access to Khan, in particular to learn more about assistance given to Iran’s nuclear program. No alleged Pakistani participants, including Khan himself, have faced criminal charges in the case.

In May 2007, the London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies released a report on the Khan network, finding that “at least some of Khan’s associates appear to have escaped law enforcement attention and could, after a period of lying low, resume their black-market business.”⁹³ Shortly after, a House panel held another hearing on the Khan network, at which several Members and nongovernmental experts called for Pakistan to allow direct access to Khan for U.S. investigators. In July, Islamabad reportedly eased house arrest restrictions on Khan, although the Foreign Ministry denied any change in Khan’s status. (See also CRS Report RL32745, Pakistan’s Nuclear Proliferation Activities and the Recommendations of the 9/11 Commission.)

⁹¹ In May 2007, Pakistan’s Ambassador to the United States reportedly said that if Khan had not been a national hero, “we would have strung him from the highest tree” (“A ‘Worrisome’ Time in Pakistan” [interview], USA Today, May 23, 2007).

⁹² At least one report indicates that U.S. investigators have, in fact, had direct access to Khan (Seymour Hersh, “The Iran Plans,” New Yorker, April 17, 2006).

⁹³ See [<http://www.iiss.org/publications/strategic-dossiers/nbm>].

Major New Plutonium Facilities? Revelations in July 2006 that Pakistan is in the midst of constructing a major heavy water nuclear reactor at the Khushab complex brought a flurry of concern from analysts who foresee a regional competition in fissile material production, perhaps including China. A subsequent report identified a third plutonium production reactor at Khushab. Upon completion, which could be several years away, two new reactors with combined 1,000-megawatt capacity might boost Pakistan's weapons-grade plutonium production capabilities to more than 200 kilograms per year, or enough for up to 50 nuclear weapons. Moreover, a January 2007 report warned that Pakistan may soon be reprocessing weapons-grade plutonium at its Chashma facility, further adding to its potential stockpile and aiding in the development of thermonuclear weapons.⁹⁴ While Islamabad does not comment directly on the constructions, government officials there insist that Pakistan will continue to update and consolidate its nuclear program for the purpose of minimum credible deterrence. The Bush Administration responded to the 2006 revelations by claiming it had been aware of Pakistani plans and that it discourages the use of the facilities for military purposes.⁹⁵

Pakistan's New Nuclear Transparency. During 2006, Islamabad appeared to launch a public relations effort aimed at overcoming the stigma caused by Khan's proliferation activities. The effort included dispatching to Washington the chief of the country's Strategic Plans Division, Lt. Gen. Khalid Kidwai, who attempted to make more transparent Pakistan's nuclear command and control structure, and who acknowledged that Pakistan's past proliferation record had been "poor and indefensible."⁹⁶ Many analysts now assert that meaningful efforts have been made to improve the physical security of Pakistan's strategic arsenal.

U.S. Nonproliferation Efforts. The United States has long sought to halt or limit the proliferation of nuclear weapons in South Asia. In May 1998, following the Indian and Pakistani nuclear tests, President Clinton imposed full restrictions on all non-humanitarian aid to both countries as mandated under Section 102 of the Arms Export Control Act. However, Congress and the President acted almost immediately to lift certain aid restrictions and, in October 2001, all remaining nuclear-related sanctions on Pakistan (and India) were removed. Officially, the United States continues to urge Pakistan and India to join the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) as non-nuclear weapon states and it offers no official recognition of their nuclear weapons capabilities, which exist outside of the international nonproliferation regime.

During the latter years of the Clinton Administration, the United States set forth nonproliferation "benchmarks" for Pakistan and India, including halting further nuclear testing and signing and ratifying the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

⁹⁴ See David Albright and Paul Brannan, June 21, 2007, at [<http://www.isis-online.org/publications/southasia/ThirdKhushabReactor.pdf>]; and January 18, 2007, at [<http://www.isis-online.org/publications/southasia/chashma.pdf>].

⁹⁵ Joby Warrick, "U.S. Says It Knew Of Pakistani Reactor Plan," Washington Post, July 25, 2006.

⁹⁶ Speech at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Washington, DC, October 24, 2006.

(CTBT); halting fissile material production and pursuing Fissile Material Control Treaty negotiations; refraining from deploying nuclear weapons and testing ballistic missiles; and restricting any and all exportation of nuclear materials or technologies. The results of U.S. efforts were mixed, at best, and neither Pakistan nor India are signatories to the CTBT or the NPT. The Bush Administration quickly set aside the benchmark framework. Concerns about onward proliferation, fears that Pakistan could become destabilized by the U.S.-led counterterrorism efforts in Afghanistan, and concern over the issue of political succession in Islamabad have heightened U.S. attention to weapons proliferation in the region. Section 1601 of P.L. 107-228 outlined U.S. nonproliferation objectives for South Asia. Some Members of Congress have identified “contradictions” in U.S. nonproliferation policy toward South Asia, particularly as related to the Senate’s rejection of the CTBT and indications that the United States seeks to build new nuclear weapons.

During a July 2007 policy review for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Under Secretary of State Burns said,

We welcome the action Pakistan has taken to bring its export controls in line with international standards, including the recent establishment of a Strategic Export Control Division within its Ministry of Foreign Affairs to centralize licensing and enforcement. Pakistan continues its cooperation with the United States under the Export Control and Related Border Security (EXBS) program. We welcome Pakistan’s participation in the Container Security Initiative and the Secure Freight Initiative.... We are also pleased that, in early June, Pakistan joined the Global Initiative to Combat Nuclear Terrorism.... Additionally, the U.S. Department of Energy is working with their counterparts in Pakistan on radiation source security and is in the process of finalizing an agreement to install radiation detection equipment at Pakistani ports and border crossings. We hope Pakistan will continue to take steps to join additional international nonproliferation programs and regimes so it can finally move beyond the stigma of the A.Q. Khan era.⁹⁷

Pakistan-India Tensions and the Kashmir Issue. In the interests of regional stability, the United States strongly encourages an ongoing Pakistan-India peace initiative and remains concerned about the potential for long-standing disagreements to cause open hostilities between these two nuclear-armed countries. Relations between Pakistan and India remain deadlocked on the issue of Kashmiri sovereignty, and a separatist rebellion has been underway in the region since 1989. Tensions were extremely high in the wake of the Kargil conflict of 1999, when an incursion by Pakistani soldiers led to a bloody six-week-long battle. Throughout 2000 and 2001, cross-border firing and shelling caused scores of both military and civilian deaths. A July 2001 Pakistan-India summit meeting failed to produce even a joint statement, reportedly due to pressure from hardliners on both sides. Major stumbling blocks were India’s refusal to acknowledge the “centrality of Kashmir” to future talks and Pakistan’s objection to references to “cross-border terrorism.”

The 2002 Crisis. Secretary of State Powell visited South Asia in mid-October 2001 in an effort to ease escalating tensions over Kashmir, but a bombing at the ⁹⁷ See [<http://www.state.gov/p/us/rm/2007/89418.htm>].

Jammu and Kashmir state assembly building later that month was followed by a December assault on the Indian Parliament in New Delhi (both incidents were blamed on Pakistan-based terrorist groups). India mobilized some 700,000 troops along the Pakistan-India frontier and threatened war unless Islamabad ended all “cross-border infiltration” of Islamic militants. This action triggered a corresponding Pakistani military mobilization. Under significant international diplomatic pressure (and likely also the threat of India’s use of force), President Musharraf in January 2002 gave a landmark address in which he vowed to end the presence of terrorist entities on Pakistani soil, and he outlawed five militant groups, including those most often named in attacks in India: Lashkar-e-Taiba and Jaish-e-Mohammed.⁹⁸

Despite the Pakistani pledge, infiltrations into Indian-held Kashmir continued, and a May 2002 terrorist attack on an Indian army base at Kaluchak killed 34, most of them women and children. This event again brought Pakistan and India to the brink of full-scale war, and caused Islamabad to recall army troops from patrol operations along the Pakistan-Afghanistan border. Intensive international diplomatic missions to South Asia reduced tensions during the summer of 2002 and appear to have prevented the outbreak of war. Numerous top U.S. officials were involved in the effort and strenuously urged the two countries to renew bilateral dialogue.⁹⁹

The Most Recent Peace Process. Pakistan and India began full military draw-downs in October 2002 and, after a cooling-off period, a “hand of friendship” offer to Pakistan by the Indian prime minister in April 2003 led to the restoration of full diplomatic relations. Yet surging separatist violence that summer contributed to an exchange of sharp rhetoric between Pakistani and Indian leaders at the United Nations, casting doubt on the nascent peace effort. A new confidence-building initiative got Pakistan and India back on a positive track, and a November 2003 cease-fire was initiated after a proposal by then-Pakistani Prime Minister Zafarullah Khan Jamali. President Musharraf subsequently suggested that Pakistan might be willing to “set aside” its long-standing demand for a plebiscite in Kashmir, a proposal welcomed by the United States, but called a “disastrous shift” in policy by Pakistani opposition parties.

Although militant infiltration did not end, New Delhi acknowledged that it was significantly decreased and, combined with other confidence-building measures, relations were sufficiently improved that the Indian prime minister attended a January 2004 summit meeting of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation in Islamabad. There Pakistan and India issued a joint “Islamabad Declaration” calling for a renewed “Composite Dialogue” to bring about “peaceful settlement of all bilateral issues, including Jammu and Kashmir, to the satisfaction of both sides.”¹⁰⁰ A major confidence-building development came in April 2005, when a new bus service was launched linking Muzaffarabad in Pakistani Kashmir and Srinagar in

⁹⁸ Text at [<http://www.presidentofpakistan.gov.pk/FilesSpeeches/Addresses/1020200475758AMword%20file.pdf>]

⁹⁹ See Polly Nayak and Michael Krepon, “US Crisis Management in South Asia’s Twin Peaks Crisis” at [<http://www.stimson.org/southasia/pdf/USCrisisManagement.pdf>].

¹⁰⁰ [http://www.indianembassy.org/press_release/2004/jan/07.htm].

Indian Kashmir, and a summit meeting produced an agreement to address the Kashmir issue “in a forward looking manner for a final settlement.” Still, many Kashmiris reject any settlement process that excludes them.

Even as the normalization of India-Pakistan relations moves forward — and likely in reaction to their apparent marginalization in the face of this development — separatist militants continue their attacks, and many observers in both India and the United States believe support for Kashmiri militants remains Pakistani state policy. Yet many indicators show positive long-term trends. Steadily reduced rates of infiltration may be attributed to the endurance of the Pakistan-India dialogue. Moreover, President Musharraf has made considerable efforts to exhibit flexibility, including December 2006 statements that Pakistan is “against independence” for Kashmir, and his offering of a four-point proposal that would lead to “self-governance ... falling between autonomy and independence.”¹⁰¹ This was seen by many analysts as being roughly in line with New Delhi’s Kashmir position. Indeed, the Indian prime minister welcomed Musharraf’s proposals, saying they “contribute to the ongoing thought process.” Prospects for a government-to-government accommodation may thus be brighter than ever before. However, political and security crises in Pakistan have slowed the process in 2007.

Baluchistan Unrest. Pakistan’s vast southwestern Baluchistan province is about the size of California and accounts for 44% of the country’s land area, but only 5% of its population. The U.S. military has made use of bases in the region to support its operations in neighboring Afghanistan. The province is the proposed setting for a pipeline that would deliver Iranian natural gas to both Pakistan and India, a project which, if brought to fruition, could bring hundreds of millions of dollars in annual transit fees to Islamabad’s national treasury. The United States opposes this “IPI” pipeline project as part of its effort to isolate Iran internationally. Security problems in Baluchistan reduce the appeal to investors of building a pipeline across the province. The presence in Baluchistan of Jundallah, a trans-border militant group that claims to fight on behalf of Baloch rights, has caused friction between Islamabad and Tehran. More broadly, such problems raise serious questions about Pakistan’s internal stability and national cohesion.

Over the decades of Pakistani independence, many of the ethnic Baloch and some of the Pashtun tribes who inhabit this relatively poor and underdeveloped province have engaged in armed conflict with federal government forces, variously seeking more equitable returns on the region’s rich natural resources, greater autonomy under the country’s federal system, or even outright independence and formation of a Baloch state that might include ethnic brethren and some territories in both Afghanistan and Iran. Non-Baloch (mostly Punjabis) have been seen to benefit disproportionately from mineral and energy extraction projects, and indigenous Baloch were given only a small role in the construction of a major new port at Gwadar. Many Baloch thus complain of being a marginalized group in their own homeland. Long-standing resentments led to armed conflicts in 1948, 1958, and 1973. The latter insurrection, which lasted four years, involved tens of thousands of armed guerillas and brought much destruction to the province; it was put down only after a major effort by the Pakistan Army, which made use of combat helicopters provided by Iran. Some 8,000 rebels and Pakistani soldiers were killed.

¹⁰¹ Somini Sengupta, “Pakistani Says Concessions Could Produce Kashmir Pact,” New York Times, December 6, 2006.

The Current Conflict. Mid-2004 saw an increase in hit-and-run attacks on army outposts and in the sabotage of oil and gas pipelines. The alleged rape of a Baloch doctor by Pakistani soldiers in January 2005 sparked provincial anger and a major spike in separatist violence over the course of the year. In December 2005, rockets were fired at a Baluchistan army camp during a visit to the site by President Musharraf. A Baloch separatist group claimed responsibility and the Pakistani military began major offensive operations to destroy the militants' camps. In the midst of increasingly heavy fighting in January 2006, Musharraf openly accused India of arming and financing militants fighting in Baluchistan. New Delhi categorically rejected the allegations. U.N. and other international aid groups soon suspended their operations in Baluchistan due to security concerns. Shortly after, Baloch militants shot and killed three Chinese engineers and their Pakistani driver, causing disruption in Islamabad-Beijing relations.

President Musharraf calls Baloch rebels "miscreants" and "terrorists;" the Islamabad government officially banned the separatist Baluchistan Liberation Army as a terrorist organization in April 2006 and at times suggests that Baloch militants are religious extremists. Yet most rebel attacks are taken against military and infrastructure targets, and — despite a government campaign to link the two movements — Islam appears to play little or no role as a motive for Baloch militancy.¹⁰² Islamabad has employed helicopter gunships and fixed-wing aircraft in its effort to defeat the rebel forces.

The Death of Nawab Bugti. Fighting waned in the middle of 2006, with hundreds of rebels surrendering in return for amnesty. The main rebel tribal leader and onetime Baluchistan chief minister, 79-year-old Nawab Akbar Bugti, had gone into hiding and was believed cut off from his own forces. In late August, Bugti was located in a cave hideout and was killed by Pakistan army troops in a battle that left dozens of soldiers and rebels dead. Recognizing Bugti's popularity among wide segments of the Baloch populace and of the potential for his killing to provide martyr status, government officials denied the tribal leader had been targeted. Nevertheless, news of his death spurred major unrest across the province and beyond, with hundreds of people being arrested in the midst of large-scale street demonstrations. Bugti's killing was criticized across the spectrum of Pakistani politicians and analysts, with some commentators calling it a Pakistani Army miscue of historic proportions.¹⁰³ Days of rioting included numerous deaths and injuries, but the more dire predictions of spreading unrest and perhaps even the disintegration of Pakistan's federal system have not come to pass. By October 2006, Pakistan's interior minister was claiming a "normalization" and decrease in violence in Baluchistan, although a low-intensity insurgency continues and the overarching problem remains unresolved.

¹⁰² Frederic Grare, "Pakistan: The Resurgence of Baluch Nationalism," Carnegie Paper No. 65, January 2006, at [<http://www.carnegieendowment.org/files/CP65.Grare.FINAL.pdf>].

¹⁰³ "Bugti's Killing Is the Biggest Blunder Since Bhutto's Execution," Daily Times (Lahore), August 28, 2006.

Narcotics. Pakistan is a major transit country for opiates that are grown and processed in Afghanistan then distributed worldwide by Pakistan-based traffickers. The State Department indicates that Pakistan's cooperation on drug control "remains strong," and the Islamabad government has made impressive strides in eradicating indigenous opium poppy cultivation. However, opium production spiked in post-Taliban Afghanistan, which is now said to supply 92% of the world's heroin.¹⁰⁴ Elements of Pakistan's intelligence agency are suspected of past involvement in drug trafficking; in March 2003, a former U.S. Ambassador to Pakistan told a House panel that their role in the heroin trade from 1997-2003 was "substantial." Taliban militants are reported to benefit significantly by taxing Afghan farmers and extorting traffickers.¹⁰⁵ Other reports indicate that profits from drug sales are financing the activities of Islamic extremists in Pakistan and Kashmir.

U.S. counternarcotics programs aim to reduce the flow of opiates through Pakistan, eliminate Pakistan as a source of such opiates, and reduce the demand for illegal drugs within Pakistan. Islamabad's own counternarcotics efforts are hampered by lack of full government commitment, scarcity of funds, poor infrastructure, and likely corruption. Since 2002, the State Department's Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs has supported Pakistan's Border Security Project by training border forces, providing vehicles and surveillance and communications equipment, transferring helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft to the Interior Ministry's Air Wing, and road-building in western tribal areas. Congress funded such programs with roughly $50 million for FY2007. (See also CRS Report RL32686, Afghanistan: Narcotics and U.S. Policy.)

Islamization, Anti-American Sentiment, and Madrassas

With some 160 million citizens, Pakistan is the world's second-most populous Muslim country, and the nation's very foundation grew from a perceived need to create a homeland for South Asian Muslims in the wake of decolonization. However, religious-based political parties traditionally have fared poorly in national elections. An unexpected outcome of the country's 2002 elections saw the Muttahida Majlis-e-Amal (MMA or United Action Front), a coalition of six Islamic parties, win 11% of the popular vote and 68 seats in the National Assembly — about one-fifth of the total. It also gained control of the provincial assembly in the North West Frontier Province (NWFP) and leads a coalition in the Baluchistan assembly. These Pashtun-majority western provinces border Afghanistan, where U.S.-led counterterrorism operations are ongoing. In 2003, the NWFP provincial assembly passed a Shariat (Islamic law) bill. In both 2005 and 2006, the same assembly passed a Hasba (accountability) bill that many fear could create a parallel Islamic legal body. Pakistan's Supreme Court, responding to petitions by President Musharraf's government, rejected most of this legislation as unconstitutional, but in February 2007 it upheld most of a modified Hasba bill re-submitted by the NWFP assembly. Such developments alarm Pakistan's moderates and Musharraf has decried any attempts to "Talibanize" regions of Pakistan.

¹⁰⁴ United Nations, World Drug Report 2007, at [http://www.unodc.org/pdf/research/wdr07/WDR_2007_1.2_opium_heroin.pdf].

¹⁰⁵ "Taliban Reaping Opium Profits," Associated Press, April 11, 2007.

Pakistan's Islamists are notable for expressions of anti-American sentiment, at times calling for "jihad" against the existential threat to Pakistani sovereignty they believe alliance with Washington entails. Most analysts contend that two December 2003 attempts to assassinate President Musharraf were carried out by Islamist militants angered by Pakistan's post-September 2001 policy shift. The "Pakistani Taliban" that has emerged in western tribal areas has sought to impose bans on television and CD players, and has even instigated attacks on girls schools in an effort to prevent female education. Some observers identify a causal link between the poor state of Pakistan's public education system and the persistence of xenophobia and religious extremism in that country.

Anti-American sentiment is not limited to Islamic groups, however. Many across the spectrum of Pakistani society express anger at U.S. global foreign policy, in particular when such policy is perceived to be unfriendly or hostile to the Muslim world (as in, for example, Palestine and Iraq).¹⁰⁶ In 2004 testimony before a Senate panel, a senior U.S. expert opined: "Pakistan is probably the most anti-American country in the world right now, ranging from the radical Islamists on one side to the liberals and Westernized elites on the other side."¹⁰⁷ In a 2005 American magazine interview, President Musharraf conceded that "the man on the street [in Pakistan] does not have a good opinion of the United States." He added, by way of partial explanation, that Pakistan had been "left high and dry" after serving as a strategic U.S. ally during the 1980s Afghan war.¹⁰⁸

A Pew poll taken shortly before the catastrophic October 2005 earthquake found only 23% of Pakistanis expressing a favorable view of the United States, the lowest percentage for any country surveyed. That percentage doubled to 46% in an ACNielsen poll taken after large-scale U.S. disaster relief efforts in earthquake-affected areas, with the great majority of Pakistanis indicating that their perceptions had been positively influenced by witnessing such efforts. However, a January 2006 missile attack on Pakistani homes near the Afghan border killed numerous civilians and was blamed on U.S. forces, renewing animosity toward the United States among segments of the Pakistani populace. An October 2006 missile attack in the same border area ostensibly was launched by Pakistani forces, but widespread suspicions of U.S. involvement further engendered anti-Americanism and concerns about Pakistani sovereignty. A further noteworthy episode in 2006 saw Pakistani cities hosting major public demonstrations against the publication in European newspapers of cartoons deemed offensive to Muslims. These protests, which were violent at times, included strong anti-U.S. and anti-Musharraf components, suggesting that Islamist organizers used the issue to forward their own political ends. Subsequently, a June 2006 Pew Center poll found only 27% of Pakistanis holding a favorable opinion of the United States, and this dropped to 19% in a September 2007 survey ¹⁰⁶ Author interviews in Islamabad, September 2006.

¹⁰⁷ Statement of Stephen Cohen before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, July 14, 2004. More than three years later, country expert Lisa Curtis warned a House panel about "the increasingly shrill anti-Americanism that is gripping Pakistani civil society" (statement before the House Armed Services Committee, October 10, 2007).

¹⁰⁸ "10 Questions for Pervez Musharraf," Time, October 3, 2005.

by the U.S.-based group Terror Free Tomorrow, suggesting that public diplomacy gains following the 2005 earthquake had receded.

In April 2007, the University of Maryland-based Program on International Policy Attitudes released a survey of public opinion in four Muslim countries. The findings indicated that significant resentment toward and distrust of the United States persist among notable segments of the Pakistani public:

- 67% of Pakistanis had an unfavorable view of the U.S. government;
- more than one-third approved of attacks on U.S. troops in Iraq and Afghanistan (another third disapproved of such attacks);
- more than one-third thought the U.S. government and/or Israel were behind the 9/11 attacks (only 2% held Al Qaeda responsible); and
- 27% reported having positive feelings toward Osama Bin Laden.¹⁰⁹

Meanwhile, an open Islamist rebellion of sorts took place in Pakistan's relatively serene capital, where from January to July 2007 radical leaders of the Red Mosque and their followers in the attached Jamia Hafsa seminary occupied illegally constructed religious buildings, kidnaped and detained local police officers, battled security forces, and threatened to launch a violent anti-government campaign unless Sharia (Islamic law) was instituted nationwide. Government security forces laid siege to the compound and subsequently launched an armed assault on its intransigent occupants. The episode indicated that support for religious extremism may be spreading into previously unaffected areas of the country.

Pakistan's Religious Schools (Madrassas).¹¹⁰ Afghanistan's Taliban movement itself began among students attending Pakistani religious schools (madrassas). Among the more than 10,000 madrassas training some 1.5 million children in Pakistan are a small percentage that have been implicated in teaching militant anti-Western, anti-American, anti-Hindu, and even anti-Shia values. Former Secretary of State Colin Powell once identified these as "programs that do nothing but prepare youngsters to be fundamentalists and to be terrorists."¹¹¹ Contrary to popularly held conceptions, however, research indicates that the great majority of Pakistan's violent Islamist extremists does not emerge from the country's madrassas, but rather from the dysfunctional public school system or even from private, English-medium schools. One study found that only 17% of international terrorists sampled had Islamic education backgrounds.¹¹²

¹⁰⁹ See [http://www.worldpublicopinion.org/pipa/pdf/apr07/START_Apr07_rpt.pdf].

¹¹⁰ See also CRS Report RS22009, Education Reform in Pakistan, and CRS Report RS21654, Islamic Religious Schools, Madrasas: Background.

¹¹¹ Statement before the House Appropriations Committee, March 10, 2004.

¹¹² Marc Sageman, Understanding Terror Networks (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2004). See also Mariam Abou Zahab and Olivier Roy, Islamist Networks (Columbia University Press, 2004); Peter Bergen and Swati Pandney, "The Madrassa Myth," New York Times, June 14, 2005.

Many of Pakistan's madrassas are financed and operated by Pakistani Islamist political parties such as the JUI-F (closely linked to the Taliban), as well as by multiple unknown foreign entities, many in Saudi Arabia.¹¹³ As many as two-thirds of the seminaries are run by the Deobandi sect, known in part for traditionally anti-Shia sentiments and at times linked to the Sipah-e-Sahaba terrorist group. In its 2006 report on international religious freedom, the U.S. State Department said, "Some unregistered and Deobandi-controlled madrassas in the FATA and northern Baluchistan continued to teach extremism" and that schools run by the Jamaat al-Dawat — considered to be a front organization of the proscribed Lashkar-e-Taiba terrorist group — serve as recruitment centers for extremists. President Musharraf himself has acknowledged that a small number of seminaries were "harboring terrorists" and he has asked religious leaders to help isolate these by openly condemning them.¹¹⁴

International attention to Pakistan's religious schools intensified during the summer of 2005 after Pakistani officials acknowledged that suspects in July's London terrorist bombings visited Pakistan during the previous year and may have spent time at a madrassa near Lahore. While President Musharraf has in the past pledged to crack down on the more extremist madrassas in his country, there continues to be little concrete evidence that he has done so, and even the president himself has admitted that movement on this issue has been slow.¹¹⁵ Some observers speculate that Musharraf's reluctance to enforce reform efforts is rooted in his desire to remain on good terms with Pakistan's Islamist political parties, which are seen to be an important part of his political base.¹¹⁶ The U.S. Congress has appropriated many millions of dollars to assist Pakistan in efforts to reform its education system, including changes that would make madrassa curriculum closer in substance to that provided in non-religious schools. More than $200 million has been allocated for such assistance since 2002. In November 2006, the U.S.-Pakistan Education dialogue was launched in Washington to bolster further engagement.

Democratization and Human Rights

Democracy and Governance. The status and development of Pakistan's democratic institutions are key U.S. policy concerns, especially among those analysts ¹¹³ P.W. Singer, "Pakistan's Madrassahs: Ensuring a System of Education Not Jihad," Brookings Institution Analysis Paper 14, November 2001; Ali Riaz, "Global Jihad, Sectarianism, and the Madrassahs in Pakistan," Institute of Defence and Strategic Studies, Singapore, August 2005.

¹¹⁴ See [<http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2006/71443.htm>]; "Some Madrassas Bad: Musharraf," Daily Times (Lahore), September 8, 2004.

¹¹⁵ See "Pakistan: Reforming the Education Sector," International Crisis Group Report 84, October 7, 2004; Charles Sennott, "Radical Teachings in Pakistan Schools," Boston Globe, September 29, 2006. Author interviews with Pakistani government officials and scholars have tended to confirm that movement on madrassa reform is slow, at best.

¹¹⁶ John Lancaster and Kamran Khan, "At an Islamic School, Hints of Extremist Ties," Washington Post, June 13, 2004; Vali Nasr, "Military Rule, Islamism, and Democracy in Pakistan," Middle East Journal 58, 2, Spring 2004.

who view representative government in Islamabad as being a prerequisite for reducing religious extremism and establishing a moderate Pakistani state. There had been hopes that the October 2002 national elections would reverse Pakistan's historic trend toward unstable governance and military interference in democratic institutions. Such hopes were eroded by ensuing developments, including President Musharraf's imposition of major constitutional changes and his retention of the position of army chief. International and Pakistani human rights groups continue to issue reports critical of Islamabad's military-dominated government. In 2007, and for the eighth straight year, the often-cited Freedom House rated Pakistan as "not free" in the areas of political rights and civil liberties. While praising Pakistan's electoral exercises as moves in the right direction, the United States expresses concern that seemingly nondemocratic developments may make the realization of true democracy in Pakistan more elusive, and U.S. officials continue to press Pakistani leaders on this issue.

Pakistan's Military-Dominated Government. General Musharraf's assumption of the presidency ostensibly was legitimized by a controversial April 2002 referendum marked by evidence of fraud.¹¹⁷ In August 2002, Musharraf announced sweeping constitutional changes to bolster the president's powers, including provisions for presidential dissolution of the National Assembly. The United States expressed concerns that the changes could make it more difficult to build democratic institutions in Pakistan. The 2002 elections nominally fulfilled Musharraf's promise to restore the National Assembly that was dissolved in the wake of his extra-constitutional seizure of power. The pro-military Pakistan Muslim League-Quaid-e-Azam (PML-Q) won a plurality of seats, while a coalition of Islamist parties made a surprisingly strong showing. The civilian government was hamstrung for more than a year by fractious debate over the legitimacy of constitutional changes and by Musharraf's continued status as army chief and president. A surprise December 2003 agreement between Musharraf and the MMA Islamist opposition ended the deadlock by bringing the constitutional changes before Parliament and by eliciting a promise from Musharraf to resign his military commission before 2005. Non-Islamist opposition parties unified under the Alliance for the Restoration of Democracy (ARD) accused the MMA of betrayal and insisted that the new arrangement merely institutionalized military rule in Pakistan.

Other apparent reversals for Pakistani democratization came in 2004, including the sentencing of ARD leader Javed Hashmi to 23 years in prison for sedition, mutiny, and forgery, and the "forced" resignation of Prime Minister Jamali for what numerous analysts called his insufficient deference to President Musharraf. Musharraf "shuffled" prime ministers to seat his close ally, Finance Minister Shaukat Aziz. Aziz is seen to be an able financial manager and technocrat favored by the military, but he has no political base in Pakistan. Moreover, in the final month of 2004 Musharraf chose to continue his role as army chief beyond the stated deadline. One senior Pakistani scholar offers a critical summary of the country's political circumstances under President Musharraf's rule:

The current power structure, often described as the "Musharraf model of governance," is narrow and suffers from a crisis of legitimacy. Its major features are: a concentration of power in the presidency, with backup from its army/intelligence and bureaucratic affiliates; induction of retired and serving military officers into important civilian institutions and thus an undermining of the latter's autonomy; co-option of a section of the political elite, who are given a share of power and patronage in return for mobilizing civilian support, on President Musharraf's terms; a reluctant partnership with the Islamic parties, especially the Muttahida Majlis-i-Amal (MMA), and soft-peddling towards Islamic groups; manipulation of the weak and divided political forces and exclusion of dissident political leaders.¹¹⁸

¹¹⁷ "Pakistan's Musharraf Wins Landslide, Fraud Alleged," Reuters, May 1, 2002.

Many analysts have opined that, despite being a self-professed “enlightened moderate,” President Musharraf has in practice strengthened the hand of Pakistan's Islamist extremist forces and that, while he “talks a good game about liberalizing Pakistani society ... his choice of allies suggests he's not serious.”¹¹⁹ In the meantime, the Pakistan army has further entrenched itself in the country's corporate sector, generating billions of dollars in annual profits from businesses ranging from construction to breakfast cereal. One estimate has this “milbus” (military business) accounting for 6% of the country's gross domestic product.¹²⁰

The bulk of Pakistanis may usefully be categorized as falling into one of two camps: “transformationists” who seek radical change to include the military's rapid and permanent withdrawal from governance, and “transitionists” who favor gradual adjustments so as to avoid any backlash that could come from an army fearful of “revolutionary” change. From this perspective, most Pakistanis are seen to hold a transformationist bent.¹²¹ Yet it may be that the country's political leadership — ruling and opposition, alike — is unprepared to abrogate the military's central role in policy making.

In May 2007, a delegation from the Washington-based National Democratic Institute issued a report on its visit to Pakistan, calling expected national elections there “critical to the nation's future;” warning that tainted elections could strengthen the position of extremist elements or further consolidate the role of the military in governance; urging President Musharraf to retire his military commission in the interest of public confidence; and calling for a significantly strengthened Pakistan Election Commission to ensure credible polls.¹²² In an indication that the Commission's credibility remains in doubt, former Prime Minister Bhutto in June 2007 filed a petition with the Pakistani Supreme Court on the removal of tens of millions of Pakistanis from election rolls, and the Hong Kong-based Asian Human Rights Commission later claimed that the Commission was illegitimately denying voting rights to 38 million people, most of them women.

¹¹⁸ Hasan-Askari Rizvi, “Towards a Solution of the Present Crisis,” Daily Times (Lahore), June 17, 2007.

¹¹⁹ Peter Beinart, “How to Deal with Dictators,” Time, July 26, 2007.

¹²⁰ Ayesha Siddiqa, Military Inc: Inside Pakistan's Military Economy (Pluto Press, 2007).

¹²¹ “‘Transformation’ Versus ‘Transition’ in Pakistan,” Daily Times (Lahore), September 7, 2007.

¹²² [http://www.accessdemocracy.org/library/2157_pk_pre_election_statement_051707.pdf].

The leadership of the country's leading moderate, secular, and arguably most popular party — the Pakistan People's Party — seek greater U.S. support for Pakistani democratization and warn that the space in which they are allowed to operate is so narrow as to bring into question their continued viability as political forces.¹²³ They also identify a direct causal link between nondemocratic governance and the persistence of religious militancy in Pakistan. According to former Prime Minister Bhutto, "Political dictatorship and social hopelessness create the desperation that fuels religious extremism Civil unrest is what the extremists want. Anarchy and chaos suit them." She asserts that elements of Pakistan's security apparatus are sympathetic to religious extremists and that these elements can only be neutralized by being made answerable to an elected government.¹²⁴

Many analysts consider a potential accommodation between President Musharraf and former Prime Minister Bhutto to be the best option both for stabilizing Islamabad's political circumstances and for more effectively creating a moderate and prosperous Pakistan (some reports have the U.S. government quietly encouraging Musharraf to pursue this option).¹²⁵ Such accommodation might include Musharraf retiring from the military following his reelection as President and allowing Bhutto to return to Pakistan and run for national office. Even as this arrangement may be in process, it is highly unlikely to alter the army's role as ultimate arbiter of the country's foreign and national security policies, but might create a transitional alliance that would empower Pakistan's more liberal and secular elements.

Judicial/Political Crisis in 2007. On March 9, President Musharraf summarily dismissed the Chief Justice of Pakistan's Supreme Court, Iftikhar Chaudhry, on unspecified charges of misconduct and nepotism. Analysts widely believe the dismissal was an attempt by Musharraf to remove a potential impediment to his continued roles as president and army chief, given Chaudhry's recent rulings that exhibited independence and went contrary to government expectations. The move triggered immediate outrage among numerous Pakistani lawyers and others who claimed Musharraf had acted unconstitutionally. Several judges and a deputy attorney general resigned in protest, ensuing street protests by lawyers grew in scale and were joined by both secular and Islamist opposition activists. By providing an issue upon which anti-Musharraf sentiments could coalesce, the imbroglio soon morphed from a judicial crisis to a full-fledged political crisis and the greatest threat to Musharraf's government since it was established in 1999. Numerous analyses conclude that the developments have severely weakened Musharraf politically and could threaten the viability of his continued rule.¹²⁶

¹²³ Author interviews with PPP leader Benazir Bhutto, Washington, DC, February 2006, and PPP officials, Islamabad, January 2004 and September 2006.

¹²⁴ Benazir Bhutto, "When I Return to Pakistan," Washington Post, September 20, 2007.

¹²⁵ See, for example, Najam Sethi, "Musharraf in the Middle," Wall Street Journal Asia, October 11, 2007.

¹²⁶ Representative is Teresita Schaffer, "Pakistan: Shrinking Control," CSIS Commentary, May 18, 2007, at [http://www.csis.org/media/csis/pubs/070518_schaffer_commentary.pdf].

The U.S. State Department at first declared the issue to be a purely internal matter and withheld further comment but, as a sense of crisis increased in Pakistan, a Department spokesman called Chaudhry's dismissal "a matter of deep concern" that the U.S. government was "monitoring very closely," and he called for the issue to be handled in a transparent manner in accordance with Pakistani law. However, in a statement that triggered concern among many Pakistanis and skeptical analysts alike, the spokesman also claimed President Musharraf was "acting in the best interest of Pakistan and the Pakistani people."¹²⁷

In refusing to be cowed by the Musharraf government and voluntarily resign his post, the suspended Chief Justice became a popular figure in Pakistan. In May, tens of thousands of supporters lined the streets as Chaudhry drove from Islamabad to Lahore to address the High Court there (a normally 4-hour drive took more than 24 hours). Chaudhry later flew to Karachi but was blocked from leaving the city's airport, reportedly by activists of the regional, government-allied Muttahida Qaumi Movement (MQM) party. Ensuing street battles between MQM cadres and opposition activists left at least 40 people dead on May 12, most of them PPP members. Reports had local police and security forces standing by without intervening while the MQM attacked anti-Musharraf protesters, leading many observers to charge the government with complicity in the bloody rioting.¹²⁸ The incidents did significant further damage to President Musharraf's standing.

U.S. Policy. While the United States maintains a keen interest in Pakistani democratization, the issue is widely seen as having become a secondary consideration as counterterrorism concerns grew after 2001. In response to an August 2007 query about U.S. attention to Pakistan's domestic politics, a State Department spokesman said,

[T]he primary concern for the United States in Pakistan is that there be free, credible, and transparent elections there and elections that allow the Pakistani people to have a real and full choice among the legitimate political actors and parties in that country.¹²⁹

Bush Administration officials repeatedly have emphasized that democratization is key to the creation of a more moderate and prosperous Pakistan. However, numerous critics of Administration policy assert that the Islamabad government has for more than five years been given a “free pass” on the issue of representative government, in part as a means of enlisting that country’s continued assistance in U.S.-led counterterrorism efforts.¹³⁰ U.S. congressional committees have expressed concern with “the slow pace of the democratic development of Pakistan” (S.Rept. 109-96) and “the lack of progress on improving democratic governance and rule of law” there (H.Rept. 109-486). Pakistan’s nominally non-party 2005 municipal elections saw major gains for candidates favored by the PML-Q and notable reversals for Islamists, but were also marked by widespread accusations of rigging. The Bush Administration made no public comment on reported irregularities.

¹²⁷ See [<http://www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/dpb/2007/mar/81762.htm>] and [<http://www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/dpb/2007/mar/81838.htm>].

¹²⁸ The Human Rights Commission of Pakistan called the riots "the result of a calculated adventure hatched by the president and the MQM with the cooperation of the Sindh government" (May 13, 2007, press release at [<http://www.hrcp.cjb.net>]; see also Isambard Wilkinson and Massoud Ansari, "Pakistan on Brink of Disaster as Karachi Burns," Telegraph (London), May 12, 2007 and Griff Witte, "Clashes in Pakistan Kill 28, Injure Scores as Unrest Escalates," Washington Post, May 13, 2007).

¹²⁹ See [<http://www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/dpb/2007/aug/91608.htm>]. In June 2007, the same spokesman said the U.S. government expects President Musharraf to "follow through on his commitments" to retire his military commission (he later clarified that this was not a "condition of the United States").

In early 2007, the Director of National Intelligence, Mike McConnell, repeated for a Senate panel the U.S. intelligence community’s conclusion that

[D]emocracy has not been fully restored since the Army took power in 1999 Musharraf continues to be criticized for remaining both the President and Chief of Army Staff, but there are no political leaders inside the country able to challenge his continued leadership. Musharraf’s secular opponents are in disarray, and the main Islamic parties continue to suffer from internal divisions and an inability to expand their support base.¹³¹

The U.S. State Department’s Country Report on Human Rights Practices 2006, issued by the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor in March 2007, does not use the word “democracy” or any of its derivatives in discussing Pakistan, but does note that “restrictions on citizens’ right to change their government” represent a “major problem.”¹³² In a June 2007 letter to Secretary of State Rice, several Members of Congress decried the “spiral of civil unrest and harshly suppressed protest in Pakistan” and asserted that U.S. and Pakistani national interests “are both served by a speedy restoration of full democracy to Pakistan and the end to state-sponsored intimidation — often violent — of Pakistani citizens protesting government actions in a legal and peaceful manner.” A September 2007 letter to Secretary Rice contained two Senators’ concerns about the political situation in Pakistan and ongoing signs of nondemocratic developments. Leading opposition political figures in Islamabad have warned that unconditional U.S. support for Musharraf’s military-dominated government could result in an anti-American backlash among Pakistan’s moderate forces.¹³³ Yet others opine that overt U.S. conditionality is unlikely to be effective and may only foster anti-U.S. resentments ¹³⁰ For example, two former senior Clinton Administration officials have criticized President Bush for choosing to “back the dictator” rather than offer clear support for democracy and rule of law in Pakistan. They contend that such a policy is damaging to U.S. interests in South Asia and in the Muslim world (Sandy Berger and Bruce Riedel, “America’s Stark Choice,” International Herald Tribune, October 9, 2007).

¹³¹ [<http://armed-services.senate.gov/statemnt/2007/February/McConnell%2002-27-07.pdf>].

¹³² See [<http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/hrrpt/2006/78874.htm>].

¹³³ Letter to Secretary of State Rice from Sen. Joe Biden, Rep. Tom Lantos, and Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen, June 1, 2007; Jo Johnson and Farhan Bokhari, “US Warned Over Backing for Musharraf,” Financial Times (London), June 12, 2007.

in Pakistan.¹³⁴ One recent analysis by a former Bush State Department official concludes that “the United States should resist the urge to threaten [Musharraf] or demand a quick democratic transition,” arguing that the Pakistani military must be pushed toward political reform in ways that do not jeopardize its “core interests.”¹³⁵ (See also CRS Report RL32615, Pakistan’s Domestic Political Developments.)

Human Rights Problems. The State Department’s most recent Country Report on Human Rights Practices (issued March 2007) again determined that the Pakistan government’s record on human rights “remained poor.” Along with concerns about anti-democratic practices, the report lists extrajudicial killings, torture, and abuse by security forces; “widespread” government and police corruption; lack of judicial independence; political violence; terrorism; and “extremely poor” prison conditions among the major problems. It further notes an increase in restrictions on press freedoms and in reports of “disappearances” of political activists. Improvement was noted, however, with government efforts to crack down on human trafficking.¹³⁶ The most recent State Department report on trafficking in persons (issued in June 2007) again said, “Pakistan does not fully comply with the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking; however, it is making significant efforts to do so.”¹³⁷

According to the Department of State, the Islamabad government is known to limit freedoms of association, religion, and movement, and to imprison political leaders. In June 2007, the House Appropriations Committee (H.Rept. 110-197) expressed concern about the Pakistani government’s apparent lack of respect for human rights. Senate reports have expressed similar concerns. The Human Rights Commission of Pakistan and international human rights groups periodically issue reports critical of Pakistan’s lack of political freedoms, lawlessness in many areas (especially the western tribal agencies), and of the country’s perceived abuses of the rights of women and minorities.

Gender Discrimination. Discrimination against women is widespread in Pakistan and traditional constraints — cultural, legal, and spousal — keep women in a subordinate position in society. In 2005, Pakistani gang rape victim Mukhtaran Mai — and Islamabad’s (mis)handling of her case — became emblematic of gender discrimination problems in Pakistan. The Hudood Ordinance was promulgated during the rule of President General Zia ul-Haq and is widely criticized for imposing stringent punishments and restrictions under the guise of Islamic law. Among its provisions, the ordinance criminalizes all extramarital sex and makes it extremely ¹³⁴ Lisa Curtis, “Bolstering Pakistan in its Fight Against Extremism,” Heritage Foundation WebMemo 1554, July 13, 2007, at [<http://www.heritage.org/Research/NationalSecurity/wm1554.cfm>] is representative.

¹³⁵ Daniel Markey, “A False Choice in Pakistan,” Foreign Affairs, July 2007, at [<http://www.foreignaffairs.org/20070701faessay86407/daniel-markey/a-false-choice-in-pakistan.html>].

¹³⁶ See [<http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/hrrpt/2006/78874.htm>]. A Pakistan Foreign Ministry spokeswoman claimed the report “lacks objectivity and contains inaccuracies.”

¹³⁷ See [<http://www.state.gov/g/tip/rls/tiprpt/2007/82806.htm>].

difficult for women to prove allegations of rape (those women who make such charges without the required evidence often are jailed as adulterers). In November 2006, the Hudood laws were amended in the Women's Protection Bill. President Musharraf supported the changes and the ruling PML-Q party joined with the opposition PPP to overcome fierce resistance by Islamist parties. The step was viewed as a landmark in efforts to create more a moderate Pakistani state. However, with the February 2007 murder of a female provincial minister in Punjab by a radical Islamist and threats being issued against girls' schools and female health workers in the NWFP, among other incidents, well-entrenched societal discrimination continues.

Religious Freedom. The State Department's most recent International Religious Freedom Report (released in September 2007) again found that in practice the Islamabad government imposes limits on the freedom of religion in Pakistan:

The Government took some steps to improve its treatment of religious minorities during the period covered by this report, but serious problems remained. Law enforcement personnel abused religious minorities in custody. Security forces and other government agencies did not adequately prevent or address societal abuse against minorities. Discriminatory legislation and the Government's failure to take action against societal forces hostile to those who practice a different faith fostered religious intolerance, acts of violence, and intimidation against religious minorities. Specific laws that discriminate against religious minorities include anti-Ahmadi and blasphemy laws that provide the death penalty for defiling Islam or its prophets.¹³⁸

The State Department has rejected repeated U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom recommendations that Pakistan be designated a "country of particular concern." The 2007 annual report from that Commission claims that, "Sectarian and religiously motivated violence persists in Pakistan ... and the government's somewhat improved response to this problem continues to be insufficient and not fully effective."¹³⁹

Press Freedom. Press freedom and the safety of journalists recently have become major concerns in Pakistan, spurred especially by the June 2006 discovery of the handcuffed body of Pakistani journalist Hayatullah Khan in a rural area of North Waziristan. Khan, who had been missing for more than six months, was abducted by unknown gunmen after he reported on an apparent U.S.-launched missile attack in Pakistan's tribal region. Khan's family is among those who suspect the involvement of Pakistani security forces; an official inquiry into the death was launched. Other journalists have been detained and possibly tortured, including a pair reportedly held incommunicado without charges for three months after they shot footage of the Jacobabad airbase that was used by U.S. forces. Paris-based Reporters Without Borders placed Pakistan 152nd out of 169 countries in its most recent annual ranking of world press freedom.

Pakistani journalists have taken to the streets to protest perceived abuses and they complain that the government seeks to intimidate those who would report the ¹³⁸ See [<http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2007/90233.htm>].

¹³⁹ See [<http://www.uscirf.gov/countries/publications/currentreport/index.html>].

facts of Pakistani counterterrorism operations. In May 2007, the New York-based Committee to Protect Journalists placed Pakistan sixth in a list of the ten countries where press freedom had most deteriorated since 2002.¹⁴⁰ In early June, in apparent reaction to media coverage of rallies in support of Pakistan's suspended Chief Justice, the Musharraf government issued an ordinance allowing the Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Agency to impose strict curbs on television and radio station operations. Human Rights Watch later called the decree a "disgraceful assault on media freedom."¹⁴¹ Implementation of the ordinance subsequently was halted. In September 2007, the U.S. Embassy in Islamabad expressed concern about recent incidents in which Pakistani journalists were subject to assaults and harassment.¹⁴²

"Disappeared" Persons. According to the U.S. State Department, there was an increase of politically motivated disappearances in Pakistan in 2006, with police and security forces holding prisoners incommunicado and refusing to provide information on their whereabouts, particularly in terrorism and national security cases. In November 2006, Pakistan's Supreme Court ordered the government to disclose the whereabouts of 41 suspected security detainees who have "disappeared." Human rights groups claim to have recorded more than 400 cases of such secret detentions since 2002.¹⁴³ London-based Amnesty International has criticized Islamabad for human rights abuses related to its cooperation with the U.S.-led "war on terror," including the arbitrary detention, enforced disappearance, and torture of hundreds of people. In 2005, New York-based Human Rights Watch released a list of 26 "ghost detainees" thought to be in U.S. custody, at least 16 of whom were arrested in Pakistan. The families of missing persons have increased their efforts to pressure the government on this issue.

Economic Issues

Overview. Pakistan is a poor country, but the national economy has gathered significant positive momentum in recent years, helped in large part by the government's pro-growth policies and by post-2001 infusions of foreign aid. However, presently high rates of domestic inflation (near 8%) have many analysts concerned about the country's macroeconomic stability, and some observers warn that the domestic capacity to sustain growth does not exist. According to the World Bank, nominal GDP per capita in 2006 was only $771, but poverty rates have dropped from 34% to 24% over the past five years. Severe human losses and property damage from an October 2005 earthquake in northern Pakistan have had limited follow-on economic impact, given a large influx of foreign aid and the stimulus provided by reconstruction efforts. The long-term economic outlook for Pakistan is much improved since 2001, even as it remains clouded in a country still dependent on foreign lending and the importation of basic commodities. Substantial ¹⁴⁰ See [<http://cpj.org/backsliders/index.html>].

¹⁴¹ See [<http://hrw.org/english/docs/2007/06/06/pakist16084.htm>].

¹⁴² See [<http://usembassy.state.gov/pakistan/h07092101.html>].

¹⁴³ "Pakistan: A Land of Systematic Disappearances," Asian Center for Human Rights, March 28, 2007; Jane Perlez, "Pakistani Wife Embodies Cause Of 'Disappeared,'" New York Times, July 19, 2007.

fiscal deficits and dependency on external aid have been chronic (public and external debt equal more than 80% of GDP), and counterbalance a major overhaul of the tax collection system and what have been major gains in the Karachi Stock Exchange, which nearly doubled in value as the world's best performer in 2002 and is up by 47% in 2007. Along with absolute development gains in recent years, Pakistan's relative standing has also improved: The U.N. Development Program ranked Pakistan 134th out of 177 countries (between Laos and Bhutan) on its 2006 human development index, up from 144th in 2003.¹⁴⁴

Pakistan's real GDP grew by 7% in the fiscal year ending June 2007, driven by booming manufacturing and service sectors. Overall growth was up from the previous year and has averaged nearly 7% over the past five years. Output from both the industrial and service sectors has grown substantially since 2002, but the agricultural sector continues to lag considerably (in part due to droughts), slowing overall growth. Agricultural labor accounts for nearly half of the country's work force, but only about one-fifth of national income and 2% of tax revenue. Expanding textile production and the government's pro-growth measures have most analysts foreseeing solid expansion ahead, with predictions at or near 6% for the next two years. More recently, a relatively small but rapidly growing entrepreneurial class has brought a boom in the consumption of luxury goods.¹⁴⁵

In June 2007, the Musharraf government unveiled a 1.6 trillion rupee ($26.5 billion) federal budget plan for FY2007-FY2008 calling for a 22% boost in public development spending and a 10% jump in defense spending. This latter expenditure combines with interest on public debt to consume two-thirds of total revenues, thus squeezing out development funds. Pakistan stabilized its external debt at about $33 billion by 2003, but this rose to nearly $39 billion in 2005 and remains near that amount to date. Still, such debt is less than one-third of GDP today, down from more than one-half in 2000. The country's reported total liquid reserves reached $13.7 billion by May 2007, an all-time high and a nearly five-fold increase since 1999. Foreign remittances have exceeded $4 billion annually since 2003 (at around $5.5 billion in FY2006-2007), up from slightly more than $1 billion in 2001. High oil prices have driven inflationary pressures, resulting in a year-on-year consumer rate of 6.4% in July 2007. While inflation is expected to ease later in 2007, many analysts call rising prices the single most important obstacle to future growth. Pakistan's resources and comparatively well-developed entrepreneurial skills may hold promise for more rapid economic growth and development in coming years. This is particularly true for the country's textile industry, which accounts for two-thirds of all exports (and up to 90% of exports to the United States).

Analysts point to the pressing need to further broaden the country's tax base in order to provide increased revenue for investment in improved infrastructure, health, and education, all prerequisites for economic development. Serious environmental degradation also retards growth: a September 2007 World Bank report conservatively estimated that at least 6% of Pakistan's GDP is lost to illness and premature mortality ¹⁴⁴ See [<http://hdr.undp.org/hdr2006/pdfs/report/HDR06-complete.pdf>].

¹⁴⁵ Peter Wonacott, "Modern and Muslim: In Turbulent Pakistan, Start-Ups Drive a Boom," Wall Street Journal, September 5, 2007.

caused by air pollution (both outdoor and indoor); diseases caused by inadequate water supplies, sanitation, and hygiene; and reduced agricultural productivity due to soil degradation.¹⁴⁶

Attempts at macroeconomic reform historically have floundered due to political instability, but the Musharraf government has had notable successes in effecting such reform. Rewards for participation in the post-September 2001 anti-terror coalition eased somewhat Pakistan's severe national debt situation, with many countries, including the United States, boosting bilateral assistance efforts and large amounts of external aid flowing into the country. According to the Asian Development Bank's Outlook 2007:

Buoyant growth, improved macroeconomic fundamentals, and strengthened international credit ratings have been the economy's hallmarks in recent years. In FY2006, high oil prices, a weak agricultural performance, as well as the effect of the October 2005 earthquake, trimmed the expansion, while strong demand-side pressures have exposed macroeconomic stresses. The economy is expected to pick up slightly in FY2007, reflecting some strengthening in agriculture and manufacturing. Inflation is set to moderate, after a further tightening of monetary policy, but still come in above the central bank's target. Spurred by an expansionary, pro-growth fiscal policy, the budget deficit will widen slightly, as will the current account deficit. The medium-term outlook remains positive, but macroeconomic stability has to be maintained and structural issues addressed.¹⁴⁷

Trade and Investment. Pakistan's primary exports are cotton, textiles and apparel, rice, and leather products. The United States is by far Pakistan's leading export market, accounting for about one-quarter of the total. During 2006, total U.S. imports from Pakistan were worth nearly $3.7 billion (up 13% over 2005). Almost 90% of this value came from purchases of textiles and apparel. U.S. exports to Pakistan during 2006 were worth about $2 billion (up 60% over 2005). Civilian aircraft and associated equipment accounted for about 42% of this value; electricity generating machinery and textile fibers were other notable U.S. exports (2005 figures had been depressed as a result of completed delivery of aircraft in 2004).¹⁴⁸ Pakistan is the 54th largest export market for U.S. goods. According to the 2007 National Trade Estimate of the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR), Pakistan has made substantial progress in reducing import tariff schedules, though a number of trade barriers remain. While estimated trade losses due to copyright piracy in Pakistan were notably lower in 2005 and 2006, book piracy accounted for about half of the 2006 losses and remains a serious concern.¹⁴⁹ Pakistan also has been a world leader in the pirating of music CDs and has appeared on the USTR's "Special 301" Watch List for 17 consecutive years (in 2004, continuing violations caused the USTR to

¹⁴⁶ See [<http://siteresources.worldbank.org/SOUTHASIAEXT/Resources/Publications/448813-1188777211460/pakceasummary.pdf>]

¹⁴⁷ See [<http://www.adb.org/Documents/Books/ADO/2007/PAK.asp>].

¹⁴⁸ See [<http://www.census.gov/foreign-trade/statistics/country/index.html>].

¹⁴⁹ The International Intellectual Property Alliance, a coalition of U.S. copyright-based industries, estimated U.S. losses of $100 million due to copyright piracy in Pakistan in 2006 (see [<http://www.iipa.com/rbc/2007/2007SPEC301PAKISTAN.pdf>]).

move Pakistan to the Priority Watch List; improved intellectual property rights protection saw it lowered back to the Watch List in 2006).¹⁵⁰ From the USTR report:

The government of Pakistan continued to take noticeable steps during 2006 to improve copyright enforcement, especially with respect to optical disc piracy. Nevertheless, Pakistan does not provide adequate protection of all intellectual property. Book piracy, weak trademark enforcement, lack of data protection for proprietary pharmaceutical and agricultural chemical test data, and problems with Pakistan's pharmaceutical patent protection remain serious barriers to trade and investment.¹⁵¹

In April 2007, the USTR again named Pakistan to its Special 301 watch list, lauding Islamabad for progress on intellectual property rights enforcement, but also expressing ongoing concerns about Pakistan's lack of effective protections in the pharmaceutical sector.

According to Pakistan's Ministry of Finance, total foreign direct investment in Pakistan exceeded $7 billion for the year ending June 2007 — an unprecedented amount doubling that of the previous year — but many investors remain wary of the country's uncertain political-security circumstances.¹⁵² About one-third of the foreign investment value came from U.S.-based investors; much of the remainder originates in Saudi Arabia and other Persian Gulf states. Islamabad is eager to finalize a pending Bilateral Investment Treaty and reach a Free Trade Agreement with the United States, believing that its vital textile sector will be bolstered by duty-free access to the U.S. market. The establishment of Reconstruction Opportunity Zones that could facilitate development in Pakistan's poor tribal regions, an initiative of President Bush during his March 2006 visit to Pakistan, may be forwarded for consideration by the 110th Congress. The Heritage Foundation's 2007 Index of Economic Freedom — which may overemphasize the value of absolute growth and downplay broader quality-of-life measurements — again rated Pakistan's economy as being “mostly unfree” and ranked it 89th out of 157 countries. The index identified restrictive trade policies, a heavy fiscal burden, weak property ownership protections, and limited financial freedoms.¹⁵³ Corruption is another serious problem: in September 2007, Berlin-based Transparency International placed Pakistan 138th out of 179 countries in its annual ranking of world corruption levels.¹⁵⁴

¹⁵⁰ See [http://www.ustr.gov/assets/Document_Library/Reports_Publications/2006/2006_NTE_Report/asset_upload_file797_9198.pdf] and [http://www.ustr.gov/assets/Document_Library/Reports_Publications/2006/2006_Special_301_Review/asset_upload_file190_9339.pdf].

¹⁵¹ See [http://www.ustr.gov/Document_Library/Reports_Publications/2007/2007_Trade_Policy_Agenda/Section_Index.html]

¹⁵² Faisal Aziz, “Pakistan Investors Wary of Political Instability,” Reuters, August 27, 2007.

¹⁵³ See [<http://www.heritage.org/research/features/index/country.cfm?id=Pakistan>].

¹⁵⁴ See [<http://www.transparency.org>].

U.S. Aid and Congressional Action

U.S. Assistance. A total of about $15 billion in direct U.S. aid went to Pakistan from 1947 through 2006, including more than $4 billion in military assistance. In June 2003, President Bush hosted President Musharraf at Camp David, Maryland, where he vowed to work with Congress on establishing a five-year, $3 billion aid package for Pakistan. Annual installments of $600 million each, split evenly between military and economic aid, began in FY2005.¹⁵⁵ When additional funds for development assistance, law enforcement, earthquake relief, and other programs are included, the non-food aid allocation for FY2006 was $788 million (see Table 1). An estimated total of $779 million is to be delivered in FY2007, the first year of the Administration's new plan to devote $750 million in U.S. development aid to Pakistan's tribal areas over a five-year period.

Congress also has authorized the spending of billions of dollars to reimburse Pakistan for its operational and logistical support of U.S.-led counterterrorism operations. As of October 2007, a total of nearly $7 billion had been appropriated for FY2002-FY2007 Defense Department spending for coalition support payments to "Pakistan, Jordan, and other key cooperating nations." Pentagon documents show that disbursements to Islamabad — at more than $5 billion or an average of about $82 million per month — account for the great majority of these funds. The amount is equal to more than one-quarter of Pakistan's total military expenditures. The Defense Department Appropriations Act, 2007 (P.L. 109-289) allowed up to $900 million in Pentagon funds be used for FY2007 reimbursements. The Bush Administration requested another $1 billion in emergency supplemental coalition support funds (CSF) for FY2007, however, the supplemental bill signed into law (P.L. 110-28) allowed for only $200 million in new CSF appropriations, bringing the FY2007 CSF authorization to $1.1 billion. The Administration has requested another $1.7 billion in coalition support for FY2008.

Possible Adjustments to U.S. Assistance Programs. Numerous commentators on U.S. assistance programs for Pakistan have recommended making adjustments to the proportion of funds devoted to military versus economic aid and/or to the objectives of such programs. For most of the post-2001 period, funds have been split roughly evenly between economic and security-related aid programs, with the great bulk of the former going to a general economic (budget) support fund and most of the latter financing "big ticket" defense articles such as airborne early warning aircraft, and anti-ship and anti-armor missiles. Only about one-tenth of the roughly $10 billion provided to Pakistan since 2001 (including coalition support) has been specifically devoted to development and humanitarian programs.¹⁵⁶ It may be useful to better target U.S. assistance programs in such a way that they more effectively benefit the country's citizens. Some analysts call for improving ¹⁵⁵ The Foreign Operations FY2005 Appropriations bill (P.L. 108-447) established a new "base program" of $300 million for military assistance for Pakistan.

¹⁵⁶ For an extensive review of the U.S. assistance strategy for Pakistan, see Craig Cohen, "A Perilous Course," Center for Strategic and International Studies, August 2007, at [http://www.csis.org/images/stories/pcr/070727_pakistan.pdf].

America's image in Pakistan by making U.S. aid more visible to ordinary Pakistanis.¹⁵⁷

One idea commonly floated by analysts is the “conditioning” of aid to Pakistan, perhaps through the creation of “benchmarks.” For example, in 2003, a task force of senior American South Asia watchers issued a report on U.S. policy in the region which included a recommendation that the extent of U.S. support for Islamabad should be linked to that government's own performance in making Pakistan a more “modern, progressive, and democratic state” as promised by President Musharraf in January 2002. Specifically, the task force urged directing two-thirds of U.S. aid to economic programs and one-third to security assistance, and conditioning increases in aid amounts to progress in Pakistan's reform agenda.¹⁵⁸ A more recent perspective is representative of ongoing concerns about the emphases of U.S. aid programs:

[T]he United States has given Musharraf considerable slack in meeting his commitments to deal with domestic extremism or his promises to restore authentic democracy. The U.S. partnership with Pakistan would probably be on firmer footing through conditioned programs more dedicated to building the country's political and social institutions than rewarding its leadership.¹⁵⁹

Some commentators emphasize that, to be truly effective, conditionality should be applied by many donor countries rather than just the United States and should be directed toward the Pakistani leadership — especially the military — to the exclusion of the general populace.¹⁶⁰ Many commentators have criticized the Bush Administration's perceived over-emphasis on relations with Musharraf and the Pakistani military at the expense of positive ties with the broader Pakistan society. In the representative commentary of a former Pakistani diplomat,

The United States made a critical mistake in putting faith in one man — General Pervez Musharraf — and one institution — the Pakistani military — as instruments of the U.S. policy to eliminate terrorism and bring stability to the Southwest and South Asia. A robust U.S. policy of engagement with Pakistan that helps in building civilian institutions, including law enforcement capability, and eventually results in reverting Pakistan's military to its security functions

¹⁵⁷ See, for example, Lisa Curtis, “Denying Terrorists Safe Haven in Pakistan,” Heritage Foundation Backgrounder No. 1981, October 26, 2006, at [http://www.heritage.org/Research/AsiaandthePacific/upload/bg_1981.pdf].

¹⁵⁸ “New Priorities in South Asia: U.S. Policy Toward India, Pakistan, and Afghanistan,” Chairmen's Report of an Independent Task Force Cosponsored by the Council on Foreign Relations and the Asia Society, October 2003, at [http://www.asiasociety.org/policy_business/india-southasia10-30-03.pdf].

¹⁵⁹ Marvin Weinbaum, “Afghanistan and Its Neighbors,” U.S. Institute of Peace Special Report 162, June 2006, p. 18, at [<http://www.usip.org/pubs/specialreports/sr162.pdf>].

¹⁶⁰ See, for example, Frederic Grare, “Rethinking Western Strategies Toward Pakistan,” Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 2007, at [http://www.carnegieendowment.org/files/grare_pakistan_final.pdf].

would be a more effective way of strengthening Pakistan and protecting United States policy interests there.¹⁶¹

Many analysts, however, including those making policy for the Bush Administration, aver that conditioning U.S. aid to Pakistan has a past record of failure and likely would be counterproductive by reinforcing Pakistani perceptions of the United States as a fickle and unreliable partner. From this perspective, putting additional pressure on an already besieged and weakened Musharraf government might lead to significant political instability in Islamabad.¹⁶² For Pakistanis themselves, aid conditionality in U.S. congressional legislation can raise unpleasant memories of 1985's so-called Pressler Amendment, which led to a near-total aid cutoff in 1990. Islamabad's sensitivities are thus acute: in July 2007, the Pakistan Foreign Ministry said aid conditions legislated in the Implementing the 9/11 Commission Recommendations Act of 2007 (P.L. 110-53) "cast a shadow" on existing U.S.-Pakistan cooperation and create linkages that "did not serve the interest of bilateral cooperation in the past and can prove to be detrimental in the future."¹⁶³

Proliferation-Related Legislation. Through a series of legislative measures, Congress incrementally lifted sanctions on Pakistan resulting from its nuclear weapons proliferation activities.¹⁶⁴ After the September 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States, policymakers searched for new means of providing assistance to Pakistan. President Bush's issuance of a final determination that month removed remaining sanctions on Pakistan (and India) resulting from the 1998 nuclear tests, finding that restrictions were not in U.S. national security interests. Some Members of the 108th Congress urged reinstatement of proliferation-related sanctions in response to evidence of Pakistani assistance to third-party nuclear weapons programs. However, the Nuclear Black-Market Elimination Act (H.R. 4965) died in committee. Legislation in the 109th Congress included the Pakistan Proliferation Accountability Act of 2005 (H.R. 1553), which sought to prohibit the provision of military equipment to Pakistan unless the President can certify that Pakistan has verifiably halted all proliferation activities and is fully sharing with the United States all information relevant to the A.Q. Khan proliferation network. This bill also did not emerge from committee.

¹⁶¹ Statement of Husain Haqqani before the House Armed Services Committee, October 10, 2007.

¹⁶² See, for example, Daniel Markey, "A False Choice in Pakistan," Foreign Affairs, July 2007, at [<http://www.foreignaffairs.org/20070701faessay86407/daniel-markey/a-false-choice-in-pakistan.html>].

¹⁶³ See [http://www.mofa.gov.pk/Press_Releases/2007/july/PR_199_07.htm].

¹⁶⁴ The Agricultural Export Relief Act of 1998 (P.L. 105-194) allowed U.S. wheat sales to Pakistan after July 1998. The India-Pakistan Relief Act of 1998 (in P.L. 105-277) authorized a one-year sanctions waiver exercised by President Clinton in November 1998. The Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 2000 (P.L. 106-79) gave the President permanent authority to waive nuclear-test-related sanctions applied against Pakistan and India after October 1999, when President Clinton waived economic sanctions on India (Pakistan remained under sanctions as a result of the October 1999 coup). (See CRS Report RS20995, India and Pakistan: U.S. Economic Sanctions, by Dianne Rennack.)

In the 110th Congress, the House-passed version of the Implementing the 9/11 Commission Recommendations Act of 2007 (H.R. 1) included provisions to suspend all arms sales licenses and deliveries to any “nuclear proliferation host country” unless the President certifies that such a country is, inter alia, fully investigating and taking actions to permanently halt illicit nuclear proliferation activities. Related Senate-passed legislation (S. 4) contained no such language and the provisions did not appear in the subsequent law (P.L. 110-53).

Coup-Related Legislation. Pakistan’s October 1999 military coup triggered U.S. aid restrictions under Section 508 of the annual Foreign Assistance appropriations act. Post-September 2001 circumstances saw Congress take action on such restrictions. P.L. 107-57 (October 2001) waived coup-related sanctions on Pakistan through FY2002 and granted presidential authority to waive them through FY2003. A November 2003 emergency supplemental appropriations act (P.L. 108-106) extended the President’s waiver authority through FY2004. The foreign operations FY2006 appropriations bill (P.L. 109-102) extended it through FY2006. The Implementing the 9/11 Commission Recommendations Act of 2007 (P.L. 110-53) provided a two-year extension through FY2008. President Bush has exercised this waiver authority annually.

9/11 Commission Recommendations. The 9/11 Commission Report, released in July 2004, identified the government of President Musharraf as the best hope for stability in Pakistan and Afghanistan, and it recommended that the United States make a long-term commitment to provide comprehensive support for Islamabad so long as Pakistan itself is committed to combating extremism and to a policy of “enlightened moderation.” In the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 (P.L. 108-458), Congress broadly endorsed this recommendation by calling for U.S. aid to Pakistan to be sustained at a minimum of FY2005 levels and requiring the President to report to Congress a description of long-term U.S. strategy to engage with and support Pakistan. A November 2005 follow-on report by Commissioners gave a “C” grade to U.S. efforts to support Pakistan’s anti-extremism policies and warned that the country “remains a sanctuary and training ground for terrorists.” In the 109th Congress, H.R. 5017 and S. 3456 sought to insure implementation of the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission. The bills contained Pakistan-specific language, but neither emerged from committee.

A new Democratic majority took up the issue again in 2007. The premiere House resolution of the 110th Congress, the Implementing the 9/11 Commission Recommendations Act of 2007 (H.R. 1), was passed in January containing discussion of U.S. policy toward Pakistan. The bill was passed by the Senate in July and became P.L. 110-53 in August, including conditions on U.S. aid to Pakistan for the first time in the post-9/11 era (see below). The Bush Administration opposed the language on the grounds that “conditionality” would be counterproductive to the goal of closer U.S.-Pakistan relations.

Selected Pakistan-Related Legislation in the 110th Congress

P.L. 110-53: The Implementing the 9/11 Commission Recommendations Act of 2007 (became Public Law on August 3, 2007):

- Ends U.S. military assistance and arms sales licensing to Pakistan in FY2008 unless the President reports to Congress a determination that Islamabad is “undertaking a comprehensive military, legal, economic, and political campaign” to “eliminating from Pakistani territory any organization such as the Taliban, al Qaeda, or any successor, engaged in military, insurgent, or terrorist activities in Afghanistan,” and “is currently making demonstrated, significant, and sustained progress toward eliminating support or safe haven for terrorists.”
- Requires the President report to Congress a long-term U.S. strategy for engaging Pakistan.
- States a U.S. policy to increase in U.S. foreign assistance to Pakistan “as the Government of Pakistan demonstrates a clear commitment to building a moderate, democratic state.”
- Provides an extension of the President’s authority to waive coup-related sanctions through FY2008.

P.L. 110-28: The U.S. Troop Readiness, Veterans’ Care, Katrina Recovery, and Iraq Accountability Appropriations Act, 2007 (became Public Law on May 27, 2007):

- Provides up to $200 million in further coalition support payments to “Pakistan, Jordan, and other key cooperating nations” in FY2007.
- Provides up to $60 million in counterdrug funds for Pakistan and Afghanistan in FY2007.
- Allows that up to $110 million in Pentagon funds may be used for Economic Support Funds (ESF) for development projects in Pakistan’s tribal areas in FY2007.
- Withholds all FY2007 supplemental ESF for Pakistan until the Secretary of State submits to Congress a report on the oversight mechanisms, performance benchmarks, and implementation processes for such funds.
- Earmarks $5 million in FY2007 ESF for the Human Rights and Democracy Fund of the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor, Department of State, for political party development and election observation programs in Pakistan.

H.R. 1585 (Senate version): The National Defense Authorization Act for FY2008 (passed by the Senate on October 1, 2007; in conference at the time of writing):

- Would withhold FY2008 and FY2009 coalition support reimbursements to Pakistan unless the President certifies to Congress that Pakistan is “making substantial and sustained efforts to eliminate safe havens for the Taliban, Al Qaeda and other violent extremists in areas under its sovereign control....”
- Would require the President to report to Congress a description of a long-term U.S. strategy for engaging with Islamabad on the problems of cross-border infiltration of “violent extremist forces” into Afghanistan and safe havens enjoyed by such forces in Pakistan.

H.R. 2764: The Department of State, Foreign Operations and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2008 (passed by the House on June 22, 2007, and by the Senate on September 6, 2007; in conference at the time of writing):

- Would appropriate $300 million in FY2008 Foreign Military Financing for Pakistan unless the Secretary of State reports to Congress that Pakistan is not “making effective and consistent efforts” to combat both Al Qaeda and Taliban forces on Pakistani territory and/or is not “implementing democratic reforms.” Upon such a report, relevant funds may be transferred to Economic Support.

H.R. 1585 (House version): The National Defense Authorization Act for FY2008 (passed by the House on May 17, 2007; in conference at the time of writing):

- Would expand programs to build the capacity of Pakistan’s counterterrorism security forces.

H.R. 2446: The Afghanistan Freedom and Security Support Act of 2007 (passed by the House on June 6, 2007; referred to Senate committee):

- Would require the President to report to Congress on implementation of policies to encourage greater Pakistan-Arab country reconstruction assistance to Afghanistan and on Pakistan-Afghanistan cooperation.
- Would authorize the President to appoint a new special envoy to promote closer Pakistan-Afghanistan cooperation.
- Would require the President to report to Congress on actions taken by Pakistan to permit or impede transit of Indian reconstruction materials to Afghanistan across Pakistani territory.

S.Res. 99 (introduced on March 7, 2007):

- Would express the sense of the Senate that U.S. military assistance to Pakistan should be guided by demonstrable progress by the government of Pakistan in achieving certain objectives related to counterterrorism and democratic reforms.

Table 1. Direct Overt U.S. Assistance to Pakistan, FY2001-FY2008
(rounded to the nearest millions of dollars)

	FY 2001	FY 2002	FY 2003	FY 2004	FY 2005	FY 2006	FY 2007 (est.)	Total FY2002-FY2007	FY 2008 (req.)
Economic Support Funds	—	625	188 ^a	200 ^a	298	297	284	1,890	383
Other Development Aid ^b	—	40	50	75	50	120	118	453	58
Total Economic Aid	—	665	238	275	348	416	401	2,343	441
Foreign Military Financing	—	75	225	75	299	297	297	1,267	300
Other Security-Related Aid ^c	4	102 ^d	32	38	50	75	81	377	99
Total Security-Related Aid	4	177	257	112	349	372	378	1,644	399
Coalition Support Funds (CSF)	—	1,169 ^e	1,247	705	964	845	996 ^f	5,926 ^f	^g
Total Non-Food Aid Plus Coalition Support Funds	4	2,010	1,741	1,093	1,661	1,633	1,775	9,913	840
Food Aid ^h	86	90	19	24	18	26	—	177	—
Grand Total	90	2,100	1,760	1,117	1,679	1,659	1,775	10,090	840

Sources: U.S. Departments of State, Defense, and Agriculture; U.S. Agency for International Development. FY2007 figures are estimates; FY2008 figures are requested.

Figures may not add up due to rounding.

- a. Congress authorized Pakistan to use the FY2003 ESF allocation to cancel $988 million and the FY2004 allocation to cancel $495 million in concessional debt to the U.S. government.
- b. Includes Child Survival and Health; Development Assistance; Emergency Refugee and Migration Assistance; and International Disaster and Famine Assistance.
- c. Includes International Military Education and Training; International Narcotics Control and Law Enforcement; Nonproliferation, Anti-Terrorism, Demining and Related; and Pentagon counternarcotics funding begun in FY2005 and totaling an estimated $45 million in FY2007 and a requested $54.7 million for FY2008.
- d. Includes $73 million for border security projects that continued in FY2003.
- e. Includes $220 million in Peacekeeping Operations Emergency Response Funds reported by the State Department.
- f. Congress authorized $1.1 billion in FY2007 CSF funds for “Pakistan, Jordan, and other key cooperating nations.” CSF reimbursements to Pakistan averaged $83 million per month for the first four months of FY2007. The FY2007 estimate is a CRS extrapolation based on that average and in line with Pentagon projections.
- g. The Administration has requested $1.7 billion in further CSF in FY2008.
- h. P.L.480 Title I (loans), P.L.480 Title II (grants), Section 416(b) of the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended (surplus agricultural commodity donations), and Food for Progress. Food aid totals do not include freight costs.

Figure 1. Map of Pakistan

Source: Map Resources. Adapted by CRS.