INTRODUCTION:

The consequences of deployment and combat exposure can affect marriage and families negatively. The study will compare telephone support/discussion groups to telephone/computer education groups and to usual care as strategies to assist spouses of returning Iraq and Afghanistan service members. The goal is to build spouses' resilience to cope with reintegration challenges, help them serve as a support system for service members, and ease the transition for families post-deployment. Some of the barriers to participating in an intervention, such as lack of local services, access, childcare, and distances, are eliminated by use of the telephone. The study will enroll 225 spouses. In the Telephone Discussion groups, a group facilitator and participants will focus on education, skills building and support. Education Only telephone/computer groups will provide the same education content, without skills building or support. Each group will meet 12 times over 6 months. Content includes ways the returning service member, spouse and family may have changed during deployment; negotiation in personal relationships; strategies to reduce or eliminate reintegration difficulties; strategies to support the returning service member; and cues to alert spouses when to seek mental health services for the family or themselves. Usual Care participants will receive a workshop focusing on the same topics after their study participation.
